Catastrophic fire engulfs historic Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris

PARIS — A massive fire engulfed the upper reaches of Paris’ soaring Notre Dame Cathedral as it was undergoing renovations Monday, threatening one of the greatest architectural treasures of the Western world as tourists and Parisians looked on aghast from the streets below.

The blaze collapsed the cathedral’s spire and spread to one of its landmark rectangular towers, but Paris fire chief Jean-Claude Gallet said the church’s structure had been saved after firefighters managed to stop the fire spreading to

The exact cause of the blaze was not known, but French media quoted the Paris fire brigade as saying the fire is “potentially linked” to a $6.8 million renovation project on the church’s spire and its 250 tons of lead. The Paris prosecutors’ office ruled out arson and possible terror-related motives, and said it was treating it as an accident.

As the spire fell, the sky lit up orange and flames shot out of the roof behind the nave of the cathedral, among the most visited landmarks in the world. Hundreds of people lined up on

PROVIDENCE — Easter can fall anywhere from March 22 to April 25, and it can feel like Christmas or the Fourth of July.

Those little Easter-egg hunters could freeze while scurrying around the backyard one year and risk heat stroke the next. Their chocolate-egg treasures could either chip a tooth or melt in their little hands.

Hyperbole? Not really. Consider a pair of Easters in the 1970s.

On Easter Day 1970, which fell on March 29, Providence got 7.8 inches of snow, a record for the date, according to Kim Buttrick, a meteorologist for the National Weather Service in

Hidden hazards

When puddles hide potholes, what was round goes flat

By Jack Perry
Journal Staff Writer

PROVIDENCE — It’s the bane of springtime driving in New England, a cruel vestige of winter’s freeze-and-thaw cycles: the pothole, a cavity with a voracious appetite for time and money.

A big one lurking at the bottom of a puddle on Allens Avenue flattened tires on several cars Monday morning.

Diane Gregoire of Warwick, whose car got two flats, counted eight cars with flats on the side of Allens Avenue. Three of those eight cars had two flat tires, she said.

Gregoire was on her way to work at the Brown University Bookstore. Her roommate, Linda Hamilton, was actually driving her in Gregoire’s car when they hit the pothole. They didn’t see it because puddles covered much of the road.

“It was quite a jolt,” Gregoire said.

They weren’t traveling fast because they were turning onto Allens Avenue, Gregoire said. Pulling off to the side of the road, they noticed several other cars pulling over.

“When we got out of the car, it was, ‘Oh, no. Two tires,’” Gregoire said.

The front and back tires on the car’s passenger side were flattened. The front tire was just two weeks old. Gregoire contacted Uber for a ride the rest of the way to work, and then noticed that an Uber driver got a flat passing through the area. It wasn’t her Uber.

Gregoire wasn’t sure of the final cost for the repair, but says it should exceed $200. Tire warranties should save her some money. She also plans to file a claim with the city or state for reimbursement.

Potholes have been wreaking havoc on cars. Last week, about 10 cars got flats on Route 195 in Seekonk. The Massachusetts State Police had to close two highway lanes so the pothole could be repaired, backing up traffic on the westbound section of highway.

John Paul, AAA Northeast senior manager of Traffic Safety and AAA’s Car Doctor, says studies have shown that in the past five years 16 million cars across the country have suffered some type of damage from potholes. On average, each of those drivers pays $300 for repairs. Potholes cost drivers across the U.S. $3 billion annually, he said.

Drivers should avoid potholes when they can do it safely, without swerving into traffic, Paul says, but it’s not always easy to spot them.

“Sometimes hiding under a big puddle is a big pothole,” he said.

Here’s a tip from Paul for drivers who cannot avoid a pothole: Slow down as much as possible while approaching the pothole and then, just before hitting it, take your foot off the brake. Freely-rolling tires are less likely to be damaged. And the car’s body will lift slightly when the foot is eased off the brake, potentially helping it avoid damage.

John Bucci, of East Greenwich, waits for a AAA tow truck Monday morning on Allens Avenue. He said he was driving only 5 mph when he hit the pothole on his way to work. [PROVIDENCE JOURNAL PHOTOS / SANDOR BODO]

Diane Gregoire, of Warwick, on her way to work, got two flat tires in an encounter with the pothole on Allens Avenue under the bridge at Thurbers Avenue. It was filled with water and invisible to drivers. Several plowed into it and ended up with at least one flat tire.

A road repair crew member stands in the tire-busting hole.

The water having receded, workers fill the pothole.

“When we got out of the car, it was, ‘Oh, no. Two tires.’”

Trinity gives a quirky stamp to ‘Little Shop of Horrors’

By Channing Gray
Special to The Journal

Trinity Rep has come a long way when it comes to having a musical presence in its lineup, a long way indeed from the days when impressive voices were few and far between. Because for the next month the theater is staging a “Little Shop of Horrors” that’s a joy to behold.

It’s a production that looks great, with Audrey Two plant puppets that could star on Broadway. It also covers all the vocal bases, while still having that quirky stamp of a well-oiled regional theater.

Mr. Mushnik’s struggling Skid Row flower shop pops out from behind a roll-up garage door (at least it did most of the time, save for a momentary technical glitch), while a crack band led by Esther Zabinski is perched on the roof.

And who better than Trinity vet Stephen Berenson to play nerdy Mr. Mushnik, the perfect nervous worry wart. The casting, in fact, was spot on, with Rebecca Gibel as his sexy assistant Audrey, making the most of tight skirts and a campy accent.

The cast of “Little Shop of Horrors” at Trinity Repertory Co., in Providence. [MARK TUREK]

Stephen Thorne is fabulous as the sadistic, motorcycle-riding dentist Orin, who lives on laughing gas and inflicting pain. Thorne shows up in a skin-tight leather outfit, swinging his hips like Elvis, then rips off his leathers to reveal a white coat with a glittering DDS on the back.

Director Tyler Dobrowsky has made sure there are no shortage of clever touches, like the Marilyn Monroe reference when Audrey’s skirts flutters over her head while standing over a heating grate. And when Chiffon, Crystal and Ronnette launch into their doo-wop routine, Janice Duclos, playing a drunken bag lady, chimes in from the sidelines.

The star of the show is, of course, Audrey Two, the plant from outer space that feeds on humans and threatens to take over the world.

As she grows, feeding on not so nice people, bigger and bigger puppets, stunning creations from Monkey Boys Productions, appear in the shop.

But in Trinity’s version, Audrey Two takes human form as well, as Rachael Warren dressed in green tights, curling up in Mr. Mushnik’s lap.

In other roles, Jude

Rebecca Gibel as Audrey and Jude Sandy as Seymour in Trinity Repertory Co.’s production of “Little Shop of Horrors.” [MARK TUREK]

Sandy couldn’t be better as the sweet, unassuming Seymour, the bubbling clerk who discovers the carnivorous Audrey Two, and nurtures her until he discovers he has a monster on his hands.

The production runs through May 12, and finds Trinity at its best when it comes to putting its own spin on a fun, if familiar, musical.

Reed: al-Qaida, Islamic State remain threats

R.I.'s senior senator meeting with commanders in Afghanistan, Iraq

By Mark Reynolds
Journal Staff Writer

After flying into Iraq from Afghanistan on Monday, U.S. Sen. Jack Reed said the growing sophistication of both al-Qaida and the Islamic State, and both groups' steady efforts to recruit educated prospects who can wage information warfare, continue to threaten Afghanistan and other countries around the world. Meanwhile, despite recent peace talks, the Taliban has announced its spring offensive, Reed said. Pursuing a peace process is "very worthwhile," but countering Taliban attacks is also necessary, Reed said, and the group must recognize various "critical" issues in any peace process, from the status of Afghan women to the need to keep pressure on ISIS and al-Qaida.

Reed

"The notion that these terror groups have gone away or been totally put out of business is totally inaccurate," Reed told The Providence Journal after taking questions from national media during a conference call. Reed said his 18th visit to Afghanistan included time spent with five Rhode Islanders, all Marine reservists, stationed at Camp Shorab.

A Marine Corps carry team moves a transfer case containing the remains of Staff Sgt. Christopher A. Slutman last Thursday at Dover Air Force Base, Del. According to the Department of Defense, Slutman, of Newark, Del., was among three American service members killed by a roadside bomb April 8 near Bagram Airfield in Afghanistan. The former British air base near the city of Lashkar Gah in Helmand Province. Reed, who arrived in Afghanistan on Saturday, also visited with Rhode Islanders serving in the Army in Kandahar. He met with political leaders, including Afghan President Ashraf Ghani, and he met repeatedly with the commander of U.S. and NATO forces in Afghanistan, Army Gen. Scott Miller. Ghani emphasized "economic development within Afghanistan and also the status of women ... as well as transportation," Reed said. "One of the points that he stressed very strongly was the need for elections," the senator said, adding that he and his colleagues pressed Ghani to make sure elections take place "because it's a question at some point of the legitimacy of the government of Afghanistan." The need for a "counter-terrorism presence" in the country was something military leaders repeated to the group, Reed said. "That is in recognition of the growing threat of ISIS in the Khorasan in terms of their sophistication," he said, "and their very deliberate attempts to not only disrupt Afghanistan but to project power any place in the world in order to advance their objectives." Traveling with Sen. Jeanne Shaheen, D-N.H., and Sen. Doug Jones, D-Alabama, Reed landed in Iraq late Monday. He said he anticipates meetings with Iraqi Prime Minister Adil Abdul-Mahdi and with the speaker of Iraq's single-assembly legislature as well as the commander of American forces in Iraq and Syria, Lt. Gen. Paul J. LaCamera. "Iraq is a critical point," said Reed, "because it's the sort of the crossroads literally of what has developed since our invasion as the Shia arc from Iran stretching now to the Hezbollah in Lebanon."

climate change," said Nicole Hernandez Hammer, a climate-change and environmental justice consultant, at one of the twice-yearly Publick Occurrences forums co-sponsored by The Providence Journal, Leadership Rhode Island and Rhode Island College. Although all 420 tickets were spoken for, an estimated 375 people turned out for the fast-paced delivery of expertise from different perspectives: Grover Fugate, director of the state's Coastal Resources Management Council; Janet Coit, director of Rhode Island's Department of Environmental Management; Mark Van Noppen, a developer and restorer of old houses; Hammer; Alex Kuffner, Providence Journal environment writer; Sunshine Menezes, director of the University of Rhode Island's Metcalf Institute of Marine & Environmental Reporting; Barnaby Evans, artistic and executive director of WaterFire Providence; and Monica Huertas, a founding member of Providence's Racial and Environmental Justice Committee, and an activist for DARE, Direct Action for Rights and Equality. Leadership Rhode Island's director, Mike Ritz, moderated, drawing out viewpoints of each panelist and taking a microphone into the audience. He explained that he would keep hold of the mic so no one could run away with it. Menezes, who teaches scientists, environmentalists and journalists to report more effectively on environmental issues, said scaring people was not a good way to engage them to take action. Instead, she advised, tell them: "Here's some of the things that are being done about it. Here's something you can do at home." She also suggested listening to climate deniers and asking why they're uncomfortable with the information. Tailoring the information "to what is most relevant for whom-ever it is you are talking with" can also be effective, she said. Hammer and Huertas objected, saying minorities often bear the burden of living next to toxic facilities or in flood plains. They need to hear full information about plans for sites. (Huertas, who lives in Washington Park, said one of her daughters had to be hospitalized for asthma seven times last summer.) Another panelist said low-income residents in Newport can't enter their houses after a rain, because of flooding. Roxanne Stern of Riverside asked the panel how far states can go to redo what the federal government is undoing. "How can we all work to create a tipping point" that will turn the federal government back to protecting the environment? Coit of the DEM agreed that the state and federal governments are working at cross purposes, and Fugate of the CRMC made the point that states "are at the forefront of many of these issues." Rhode Island is working on reducing transportation emissions, Coit said. Fugate's job is to enforce regulations designed to protect Rhode Island's 400 miles of coastline. Huertas, a lead organizer for the No LNG in PVD campaign, spoke up: "The state of Rhode Island needs to stop building fossil-fuel infrastructure," she said, drawing enthusiastic applause. "Thank you," someone called from the front row. Ritz brought the microphone to Lauren Maunus, 21, who stood up with four other young people, all holding a banner that said "We demand a Green New Deal." Maunus said no one was talking about solutions, when the Green New Deal was a solution they should all be backing. "Young people are the largest voting block in this country," she said. She was on a roll, and Ritz interrupted to ask if she had a question. "Why are we not talking about a Green New Deal," she asked, "and moving right now to address" the problem? Hammer thanked her for raising the point, adding that the Rhode Island population is about 25 percent people of color, and white voices fall short of representing minority needs. Huertas said getting poor people with families to turn out for community organizing is difficult. She often has to provide dinner, child care, bus fare or parking to get participation at a meeting. When she says that people of color are not in the Sierra Club, she is told, "It's one Earth. We all live in it." "We all live in it, duh," she said, "but we are most affected. I live on the other side of (the bay from) Riverside. It's not so beautiful" at the Port of Providence, beside the tanks of fuel. As she spoke, campus security officers approached the students who were still standing and holding the Green New Deal banner. "They're not bothering anyone," Huertas said. Ritz explained that the college has a rule that signs can't be displayed in auditoriums, because the people behind them can't see. A compromise was reached. The students held the sign lower, but remained standing. The officers let them. Menezes said people need to insist that their politicians "go on the record to say what they will do to fight climate change" and vote accordingly. Evans said artists, musicians, writers, rap artists, everyone needs to be involved in spreading ideas about protecting the planet. Van Noppen urged residents to get involved in government and help write the rules that developers like him must follow. — dnaylor@providencejournal.com (401) 277-7411 On Twitter: @donita22

PUBLICK OCCURRENCES

Crowd sees climate change as real and formidable

But those who arrived pessimistic ended up more hopeful, and vice-versa

By Paul Edward Parker
Journal Staff Writer

PROVIDENCE — The audience at Monday night's Public Occurrences forum about climate change and the search for solutions was nearly unanimous in agreement that climate change is a real phenomenon, according to a survey of audience members. A total of 98% said that it is real, with 82% saying that humans are the primary cause and 16% saying that it is mainly a natural phenomenon. While the audience was largely in agreement about the problem, a perhaps surprising number themselves helped contribute to climate change: more than 45% arrived at the forum on the Rhode Island College campus by driving alone in a fossil-fuel-powered vehicle. Another 20% carpooled in a fossil-fuel-powered vehicle. Slightly more than a quarter — 27% drove electric or hybrid vehicles. Only one person reported traveling by bus. Electronic remote controls were given randomly to 102 of the 375 audience members, allowing them to vote on multiple-choice questions, including ones on how they arrive at the event, whether they think climate change is real and how optimistic they are that we can adequately address the impacts of climate change. Public Occurrences was sponsored by The Providence Journal, Leadership Rhode Island and RIC. Perhaps not surprising given the high percentage of environmentally aware audience members who drove alone, the audience was not terribly optimistic that the impacts of climate change could be addressed. Only 42% at the start of the forum rated themselves as optimistic or highly optimistic the impacts could be addressed, while 39% were pessimistic and 18% were highly pessimistic. That changed slightly by the end of the forum, with 51% placing themselves in the optimistic categories and 49% in the pessimistic categories. Interestingly, those who counted themselves pessimistic at the start were more likely to increase their optimism (or reduce the intensity of their pessimism) while those optimistic at the start were generally less optimistic at the end. themselves highly optimistic at the start, only one-third remained so at the end. The other two-thirds shifted to simply "optimistic."

And the ones who rated themselves simply "optimistic" at the start ended with three-quarters remaining optimistic, while one-quarter fell into the pessimistic categories.

Meanwhile, 37% who were pessimistic at the start rated themselves optimistic or highly optimistic at the end. Even 23% of those who were "highly pessimistic" at the start were optimistic or highly optimistic at the end.

Audience members were asked to choose among five options for the most effective means of combating climate change.

A majority — 54% — chose switching to renewable forms of energy. Three options, ranging from 12% to 14%, came in next: establishing a "carbon tax" on polluters, improving energy efficiency and developing technology to reverse the effects of climate change. A fifth option, driving less and using public transportation, garnered 6%.

Half the people who drove alone in fossil-fuel-powered vehicles backed renewable energy, while three-quarters of those who drove electric or hybrid cars did.

Nine percent of fossil-fuel drivers backed driving less and using public transportation, while none of the electric/hybrid drivers did.

Fall River’s Notre Dame was also consumed by flames

The Standard-Times

FALL RIVER — Early in the afternoon of May 11, 1982, Fall River’s Flint neighborhood lost its own Notre Dame.

A worker doing repairs atop the Notre Dame de Lourdes Church said he smelled smoke. Then another worker said the same.

Barely an hour later, the historic church, a Fall River landmark with its distinctive twin spires, was engulfed in flames. A half hour after that, its destruction was total.

The inferno not only claimed Notre Dame, dedicated in 1906 for the French-Canadian congregation which rebuilt after fire destroyed the original wooden church in 1893. It also consumed dozens of residences and businesses, leaving 100 families ignited dry roof timbers.

A determined neighborhood fought back from the ashes. Notre Dame was also rebuilt and reopened in 1986; the new church included a stained-glass window that was being repaired out of state at the time of the fire.

But the trials of Notre Dame de Lourdes did not end there. In 2012, the Diocese of Fall River announced plans to merge Notre Dame with Immaculate Conception. Both parishes were struggling with declining attendance and growing debt. The new church, St. Bernadette, was located at Notre Dame.

But after just six years, the diocese said St. Bernadette’s was no longer viable. Bishop Edgar da Cunha celebrated the final Mass there on Aug. 5, 2018.

bridges around the island that houses the church, watching in shock as acrid smoke rose in plumes. Speaking alongside junior Interior minister Laurent Nunez late Monday, Gallet noted that “two thirds of the roofing has been ravaged.” He said firefighters would keep working over-night to cool down the building.

Late Monday, signs pointed to the fire nearing an end as lights could be seen through the windows moving around the front of the cathedral, apparently investigators inspecting the scene. The city’s mayor, Anne Hidalgo, said the significant collection of art work and holy objects inside the church had been recovered. Remarkably, only one of the about 400 firefighters who battled the blaze was injured, officials said.

The fire came less than a week before Easter amid Holy Week commemorations. As the cathedral burned, Parisians gathered to pray and sing hymns outside the church of Saint Julien Les Pauvres across the river from Notre Dame while the flames lit the sky behind them. Paris Archbishop Michel Aupetit invited priests across France to ring church bells in a call for prayers.

French President Emmanuel Macron was treating the fire as a national emergency, rushing to the scene and straight into meetings at the Paris police headquarters nearby. He pledged to rebuild the church and said he would seek international help to do so.

“The worse has been avoided although the battle is not yet totally won,” the president said, adding that he would launch a national funding campaign on Tuesday and call on the world’s “greatest talents” to help rebuild the monument.

Built in the 12th and 13th centuries, Notre Dame is the most famous of the Gothic cathedrals of the Middle Ages as well as one of the most beloved structures in the world. Situated on the Ile de la Cite, an island in the Seine river, its architecture is famous for, among other things, its many gargoyles and its iconic flying buttresses.

Among the most celebrated artworks inside are its three stained-glass rose windows, placed high up on the west, north and south faces of the cathedral. Its priceless treasures also include a Catholic relic, the crown of thorns, which is only occasionally displayed, including on Fridays during Lent.

French historian Camille Pascal told BFM broadcast channel the blaze marked “the destruction of invaluable heritage.”

“It’s been 800 years that the Cathedral watches over Paris,” Pascal said. “Happy and unfortunate events for centuries have been marked by the bells of Notre Dame.”

He added: “We can be only horrified by what we see.”

Reactions from around the world came swiftly including from the Vatican, which released a statement expressing shock and sadness for the “terrible fire that has devastated the Cathedral of Notre Dame, symbol of Christianity in France and in the world.”

In Washington, Trump tweeted: “So horrible to watch the massive fire at Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris” and suggested first responders use “flying water tankers” to put it out.

Cardinal Timothy Dolan, the archbishop of New York, said he was praying “to ask the intercession of Notre Dame, our Lady, for the Cathedral at the heart of Paris, and of civilization, now in flames! God preserve this splendid house of prayer, and protect those battling the blaze.”

REACTION

Around world, ‘our hearts ache’ at cathedral fire

By Andrew Selsky

The world reacted with shock and prayers to the massive fire at the Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris, united in grief and in solidarity with the people of France.

As the flames tore through the 12th-century cathedral, Spain's prime minister offered France the help of his country in the recovery.

The fire is a "catastrophe for France, for Spain and for Europe," Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez tweeted Monday, adding that the flames are destroying "850 years of history, architecture, painting and sculpture."

French President Emmanuel Macron told reporters near the scene that he will seek international help, including from the "greatest talents" in the world, to rebuild Notre Dame.

President Donald Trump, speaking at an appearance in Minnesota, spoke of the "terrible, terrible fire" that devastated "one of the great treasures of the world."

"It's a part of our growing up, it's a part of our culture, it's a part of our lives," Trump said of the landmark.

The Notre Dame Cathedral, situated on an island in the Seine River in the heart of Paris, is one of the world's most visited tourist destinations, drawing some 13 million people each year. The fire's emotional impact was widely felt. People from all over described in Facebook posts how they cried when they heard about the fire.

"Notre Dame is one of the world's great treasures, and we're thinking of the people of France in your time of grief," Obama said on Twitter. Michelle Obama, who was in Paris on Monday on a book tour, said "my heart aches with the people of France."

"The majesty of Notre Dame — the history, artistry, and spirituality — took our breath away, lifting us to a higher understanding of who we are and who we can be," she tweeted. She predicted the cathedral would rise again.

Japan's government early Tuesday expressed sympathy and said it would consider sending support to the French government. "Its damage is a loss to the world and our hearts ache," said Yoshihide Suga, the chief cabinet secretary.

The Vatican said Pope Francis "has seen with shock and sadness the news of the terrible fire."

As the flames spread, Cardinal Timothy Dolan, the archbishop of New York, prayed at St. Patrick's Cathedral in Manhattan for intercession.

"God preserve this splendid house of prayer, and protect those battling the blaze," Dolan said in a statement.

Paris Mayor Anne Hidalgo said many works of art and holy objects inside the church had been saved, but the art world was distressed about what might have been lost.

Barbara Drake Boehm, senior curator at the Metropolitan Museum of Art's medieval Cloisters branch in New York, was desolate about damage to the cathedral, which she called "one of the great monuments to the best of civilization."

"Civilization is just so fragile," Boehm told a reporter in a trembling voice. "This great hulking monument of stone has been there since 1163. It's come through so many trials."

Jeff Ament, bass player for Pearl Jam, remembered spending hours at the cathedral in his first visit, in 1991, with record executive Michael Goldstone.

Chinese woman who entered Mar-a-Lago denied bail

A federal judge denied bail Monday for a Chinese woman charged with lying to illegally enter President Donald Trump's Mar-a-Lago club, saying her actions and statements suggest "she was up to something nefarious" and there is an "extreme risk of flight" if she were released.

Federal Magistrate Judge William Matthewman issued the ruling for 33-year-old Yujing Zhang, who pleaded not guilty Monday to charges of lying to federal agents and illegal entering of a restricted area. Zhang faces up to five years if convicted. Prosecutors did back away from their previous contention that Zhang was carrying a computer thumb drive containing malware, saying further tests have put that in doubt.

Storms leave deaths, damage

Strong storms, including at least one tornado, swept through parts of the Midwest and the Mid-Atlantic region, damaging homes and businesses and causing injuries after storms in the South killed at least eight people.

Storms that hit Ohio on Sunday and moved into New Jersey overnight into Monday brought heavy rains, lightning, strong winds and, in Ohio, at least one tornado. The storms followed worse conditions that had swept across the South , unleashing more than a dozen confirmed tornadoes and flooding, killing at least eight people, injuring dozens and flattening much of a Texas town.

A Wayne County jury earlier found him guilty of first-degree murder and other charges in connection with the February 2018 fatal shooting in Taylor of 60-year-old Keith Kitchen. Griffin declined to address the court.

Authorities said Griffin had lost his job at the company in November 2017.

COLLEGE ADMISSIONS SCANDAL

Loughlin, Giannulli plead not guilty

By Alanna Durkin Richer
The Associated Press

BOSTON — “Full House” actress Lori Loughlin and her fashion designer husband, Mossimo Giannulli, pleaded not guilty Monday to charges that they paid $500,000 in bribes to get their daughters into the University of Southern California.

The couple is among 50 prominent parents, athletic coaches and others charged in a sweeping college admissions bribery scam that has embroiled elite school across the country, such as Stanford, Georgetown and Yale.

Loughlin and Giannulli filed court documents Monday waiving their right to appear for an arraignment and entering not guilty pleas to the two charges against them. The judge granted their requests, meaning they will not have to show up at Boston's federal court to be arraigned.

Thirty-three wealthy parents were charged last month in what authorities have called the biggest college admissions case ever prosecuted by the Justice Department. They are accused of paying admissions consultant Rick Singer to rig standardized test scores and bribe college coaches and other insiders to get their children into selective schools.

Loughlin and Giannulli are charged with paying bribes to have their daughters designated as crew recruits to USC, even though neither of them is a rower. Authorities say Loughlin and Giannulli helped create fake athletic profiles for the teens by sending Singer photos of their teens posing on rowing machines.

After their older daughter was admitted to USC, authorities say Giannulli, whose Mossimo clothing had long been a Target brand until recently, sent Singer an email with the subject line, “Trojan happiness,” thanking him for his “efforts and end result!”

Loughlin, who played Aunt Becky on the sitcom “Full House,” and Giannulli haven’t publicly addressed the allegations against them.

Their daughter, Olivia Jade Giannulli — a social media star who has a popular YouTube channel — was dropped from deals with cosmetics retailer Sephora and hair products company TRESemme after her parents’ arrest.

Prosecutors last week added a money laundering conspiracy charge against Loughlin, Giannulli and more than a dozen other parents who are still fighting the case, increasing the pressure on them to plead guilty. Several other parents who were indicted alongside Loughlin and Giannulli have also filed court documents entering not guilty pleas.

Each of the charges Loughlin and Giannulli faces call for up to 20 years in prison, although first-time offenders would get only a small fraction of that if convicted.

Fellow actress Felicity Huffman, who starred in ABC’s “Desperate Housewives,” and 12 other parents announced last week that they have agreed to plead guilty to a single charge of conspiracy to commit mail fraud and honest services mail fraud. Huffman is scheduled to appear in Boston on May 21 to enter her plea.

Prosecutors have said they will seek a prison sentence on the low end of four to 10 months for Huffman, who was charged with paying $15,000 to boost her daughter’s SAT score.

2020 ELECTION

Unions urge Dems to focus on kitchen table economics

By Michelle L. Price and Nicholas Riccardi
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Ardently liberal, pro-labor and anti-corporate cash, the field of Democrats running for president may look like a union activist’s dream. But some key labor leaders are starting to worry about the topics dominating the 2020 conversation.

The candidates are spending too much time talking about esoteric issues like the Senate filibuster and the composition of the Supreme Court and not enough time speaking the language of workers, several union officials said. Those ideas may excite progressive activists, they said, but they risk alienating working-class voters.

“They’ve got to pay attention to kitchen table economics,” said Ted Pappageorge, president of the Las Vegas Culinary Union that represents 60,000 hotel and casino workers. “We don’t quite see that.”

Terry McGowan, president of the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 139, in Wisconsin, said many of the issues driving the 2020 primary so far are distractions.

“The people that are into politics, the people who like sideshows, they’re into that,” he said, citing the debates over reparations for slavery and immigration as examples. “The masses just want to feed their families.”

The unease may be an early warning sign for Democrats, who watched as many white, working-class voters, including many union members in key Rust Belt states, chose Trump three years ago. Democrats are hoping to win back some of those voters next year, a challenge that is made harder, some argue, by labor’s struggle to build its membership and influence its rank and file. Democrats’ early messages may not help, some said.

“You see where some of the party’s being driven. It’s no secret,” said Rusty McAllister, executive secretary of the Nevada AFL-CIO.

McAllister pointed to “Medicare for all” — the health care proposal of choice for several candidates — as an example of Democrats’ not seizing on labor’s top priorities. Many unions already organized and fought for private health insurance for their members. “That’s not something that I think that labor is as much focused on as some of the progressives are,” McAllister said.

Such concerns — which stretched from the progressive-minded organizing halls of Nevada to the Rust Belt precincts — were typically focused on the conversation, not the candidates. The early 2020 primary has included detours into debates over the Senate filibuster, the composition of the Supreme Court and breaking up technology companies.

Ken Broadbent, business manager of the Pittsburgh-based Steamfitters Local 449, worried that Democrats are too focused on environmental plans like the Green New Deal, a blueprint for shifting the U.S. economy away from fossil fuels, and will neglect the importance of swing state Pennsylvania’s rich natural gas deposits in creating jobs.

“Jobs is where we’ve got to keep things focused,” Broadbent said.

To be sure, many unionists are excited about the presidential field. Contenders include liberal stalwarts like Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, whose campaign became the first in U.S. history with a unionized workforce, and Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren, who joined striking Stop & Shop workers on a picket line in New Hampshire on Friday. California Sen. Kamala Harris hired a top Service Employees International Union executive for her campaign and made her first proposal one to raise teacher’s pay.

Man in Smollett case wins boxing title

two brothers who say Jussie Smollett paid them to help him stage a racist, anti-gay attack against himself has won an amateur boxing title in Chicago.

The Chicago Tribune reports that Abimbola "Abel" Osundairo became a Chicago Golden Gloves champion with a technical knockout Friday night at a stadium in the Chicago suburb of Cicero. Osundairo won the senior novice division at the 178-pound limit.

Police say Osundairo and his brother told investigators in February that the "Empire" actor paid them to help orchestrate a Jan. 29 attack in downtown Chicago because he was unhappy with his pay on the Fox TV show and was looking to promote his career.

Police have said the brothers are bodybuilders and aspiring actors who knew Smollett. Their testimony led to criminal charges against Smollett, which were dropped in March.

Smollett maintains the attack was real.

Joan Collins thanks firefighters after fire

LONDON — Joan Collins has thanked firefighters for their quick response after a blaze erupted in her London apartment.

The 85-year-old actress shared video images of a charred wall on social media after the weekend fire. She also tweeted thanks to the "marvelous" firefighters who tackled the "terrifying" blaze.

Collins said her husband, Percy Gibson, was a "hero" for trying to douse the flames with a fire extinguisher.

The London Fire Brigade said Monday that the blaze in the ritzy Belgravia neighborhood was caused by sunlight reflecting off a shaving mirror and setting fire to a bathroom blind.

2020 ELECTION

Trump gave most a tax cut and they didn't notice

By Sahil Kapur and Laura Davison Bloomberg

Republicans passed a sweeping tax cut for two-thirds of Americans in 2017, saying it would pay for itself and the American public would thank them. Now, as Americans finish filing to the IRS for the first time under the new system, the law has swelled the deficit and surveys show just one-fifth of taxpayers believe their taxes have gone down. That's made it hard for President Donald Trump to leverage the tax cuts as an issue in 2020, when he's up for reelection and his party will be seeking to retake the House of Representatives. "The Democrats really outmaneuvered the Republicans by convincing the American people that the main thrust of the tax reform package was to cut taxes for the wealthy," said Dan Eberhart, a major Republican donor who runs the drilling services company Canary. Republicans "failed to fully explain the success to voters." Trump is going to try again on Monday when he goes to Minnesota, a potential swing state in the 2020 election, to promote what Republicans consider their signature legislative achievement. It's part of a week of events designed to promote the tax law's effects on the economy as he turns to his next campaign. The Trump administration and congressional Republicans sold the tax law as fuel for economic growth and deficit reduction. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell gave assurances in December 2017 that the measure would not only contain the deficit but be a "revenue-producer." Trump's top economic adviser, Larry Kudlow, said last week that the tax cut package had largely already paid for itself, a statement that conflicts with government data. The U.S. budget shortfall grew by 17 percent to $779 billion in fiscal year 2018, which the Congressional Budget Office has said was partly a consequence of the tax law. Along with additional spending that's been signed into law, the CBO projects the deficit will surpass $1 trillion by 2020. When the law passed, McConnell said, "If we can't sell this to the American people, we ought to go into another line of work." He added that the GOP merely needed to tell the public "that you have more money in your pocket." But an NBC/Wall Street Journal poll this month showed that just 17 percent of Americans believe their taxes have been cut. A Reuters/Ipsos poll in March found that 21 percent thought their taxes were lowered. That's despite an analysis by the nonpartisan Tax Policy Center that two out of three taxpayers would see their taxes go down. The biggest benefits, though, go to the top 1 percent, who are projected to receive an average tax break of $62,000 in 2018, while the middle one-fifth of income earners got an average tax cut of $1,090 - about $20 per biweekly paycheck. The law appears to have met a similar political fate as President Barack Obama's stimulus package in 2009, in which most Americans received a one-year tax break but the incremental gains in paychecks were so small that most didn't notice. Eberhart said the Trump administration wanted "an immediate reaction" so it reduced the amount the IRS withholds from regular paychecks starting in 2018. The move backfired. "It was too small an amount for most to notice," he said. Adding to voters' frustration, their tax refunds were smaller than expected, down about 1.1 percent overall, but still noticeable to individual households. White House economic adviser Kevin Hassett on Friday dismissed poor poll results, saying that they might be explained by general frustration with the tax system broadly. He cited other data, such as the Michigan survey of consumer sentiment, that "suggest that you should have a very optimistic outlook for economic growth this year." The tax law, passed by Republicans without any Democratic support, lowered the corporate rate from 35 percent to 21 percent and cut individual taxes across income brackets for eight years. It doubled the standard deduction and enhanced the child tax credit. And it closed or tightened various tax breaks - most notably by capping the amount of state and local taxes that can be deducted - which had its biggest impact on residents of high-tax, largely Democratic-run states.

Norton, Massachusetts. Six years later, Easter fell on April 18, and the temperature climbed to 87 degrees in Providence, a record high, Buttrick said. This year, Easter falls on April 21. It's likely to be warmer than Easter of 1970 and cooler than Easter of 1976, but there's no guarantee. Spring in Southern New England has a mercurial temperament.

Why does Easter move around so much? Its date is determined through a combination of the lunar phase and the spring equinox, with a slight twist that can cause some confusion, particularly in years like this. Generally speaking, Easter falls on the first Sunday following the first full moon after the vernal (spring) equinox, according to Catholic.com. If the first full moon happens on the equinox, Easter is the following Sunday. Here's the twist: The vernal equinox can fall on one of three days, March 19, 20 or 21. For the purposes of determining Easter, it's assumed that the equinox arrives on March 21. Among those thrown off by the twist this year was amateur astronomer Dave Huestis, a columnist and member of Skyscrapers Inc., a group of amateur astronomers who operate Seagrave Memorial Observatory in North Scituate. Knowing that the spring equinox would arrive on March 20, Huestis expected Easter to fall on Sunday, March 24.

"When I looked up the date for Easter 2019 (April 21) I immediately realized something was not right," Huestis wrote in his monthly column. "When one has followed the motion of the heavens for as long as I have, you can anticipate when and where events will happen. Being well aware of the 'formula' for determining the date for Easter, I initially expected it would fall on Sunday, March 24. "Why? This year the vernal equinox was on Wednesday, March 20, at 5:58 p.m. EDT (Eastern Daylight Time). The full moon on or after that date occurred on the same day at 9:43 p.m. EDT. Therefore, I calculated that Easter would be observed on the following Sunday, March 24, almost as early as it can be celebrated. "So why was my reasoning incorrect? Because of the fact that the vernal equinox date does vary, the Easter date depends on the 'ecclesiastical approximation of March 21 for the vernal equinox' according to https://www.timeanddate.com/calendar/determining-easter-date.html. This stipulation holds true even if the vernal equinox falls on the 19th or 20th of March. "Considering this additional qualification using March 21 as the date for the vernal equinox, the next full moon after March 21 will be on April 19 this year. Therefore, Easter will be celebrated on Sunday, April 21. "It is always a great day when you learn something new!" Easter is still days away, and it's difficult to say exactly what kind of weather it will bring. After all, as Buttrick says, "You can still get snow late in April." In fact, on April 21, 1947, Providence had 0.4 inches of snow, a record for the date. That's barely enough to cover the smallest of Easter eggs, but snow nonetheless. Chances are better that the temperature will climb to near 61 degrees, the normal high for that date, and might be perfect for Easter-egg hunting. It will be interesting to see if April 21 gets better weather than March 24, the date that some calculated for Easter. The high in Providence on that Sunday was 57 degrees, seven degrees higher than normal. It didn't snow, or even rain. —jperry@providencejournal.com (401) 277-7614 On Twitter: @jgregoryperry

POLITICS

Ilhan Omar says Trump encourages violence and hate

By Darlene Superville The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Rep. Ilhan Omar says she's faced increased death threats since President Donald Trump spread around a video that purports to show her being dismissive of the 2001 terrorist attacks. "This is endangering lives," she said, accusing Trump of fomenting right-wing extremism. "It has to stop." Her statement late Sunday followed an announcement by House Speaker Nancy Pelosi that she has taken steps to ensure the safety of the Minnesota Democrat and the speaker's call for Trump to take down the video. Soon after Pelosi's statement, the video disappeared as a pinned tweet at the top of Trump's Twitter feed, but it was not deleted.

And Trump further escalated the standoff Monday morning, tweeting that, "Before Nancy, who has lost all control of Congress and is getting nothing done, decides to defend her leader, Rep. Omar, she should look at the anti-Semitic, anti-Israel and ungrateful U.S. HATE statements Omar has made." "She is out of control, except for her control of Nancy!" Trump added. Pelosi was among Democrats who had criticized Trump over the tweet, with some accusing him of trying to incite violence against the Muslim lawmaker. An upstate New York man recently was charged with making death threats against her. White House press secretary Sarah Sanders defended Trump earlier Sunday, saying the president has a duty to highlight Omar's history of making comments that others deem anti-Semitic or otherwise offensive and that he wished no "ill will" upon the first-term lawmaker. But Omar said that since Trump retweeted the video Friday night, she's received many threats on her life that referred or replied to the posted video. "Violent crimes and other acts of hate by right-wing extremists and white nationalists are on the rise in this country and around the world," she said. "We can no longer ignore that they are being encouraged by the occupant of the highest office in the land." She said: "We are all Americans." Earlier, Pelosi issued a statement while traveling in London saying she had spoken with congressional authorities "to ensure that Capitol Police are conducting a security assessment to safeguard Congresswoman Omar, her family and her staff." Pelosi said officials will continue to monitor and assess threats against Omar and called on Trump to discourage such behavior. "The President's words weigh a ton, and his hateful and inflammatory rhetoric creates real danger," Pelosi said. "President Trump must take down his disrespectful and dangerous video." The video in Trump's tweet included a snippet from a recent speech Omar gave to the Council on American-Islamic Relations, in which she described the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attack on the World Trade Center as "some people did something," along with news footage of the hijacked airplanes hitting the Twin Towers. Trump captioned his tweet with: "WE WILL NEVER FORGET!" Critics accuse Omar of being flippant in describing the perpetrators of the attacks that killed nearly 3,000 people. She later sought to defend herself by tweeting a quote from President George W. Bush, in which the Republican president referred to the attackers as "people" just days after 9/11.

Mueller's conclusions — including a crucial one on obstruction of justice that Trump again misrepresented — produced by Attorney General William Barr. "Mueller, and the A.G. based on Mueller findings (and great intelligence), have already ruled No Collusion, No Obstruction," Trump tweeted. "These were crimes committed by Crooked Hillary, the DNC, Dirty Cops and others! INVESTIGATE THE INVESTIGATORS!" Press Secretary Sarah Sanders repeatedly tried to make the same case on TV talk shows on Sunday. But the political battle is far from finished over the special counsel's investigation of Russian efforts to help Trump in 2016 and whether there was cooperation with his campaign. Democrats are calling for Mueller himself to testify before Congress and have expressed concern that Barr will order unnecessary censoring of the report to protect the president. The House Judiciary Committee, led by Rep. Jerry Nadler of New York, is poised to try to compel Barr to turn over an unredacted copy as well as the report's underlying investigative files. The Justice Department announced Monday that it expects to release the redacted version Thursday morning, sending the findings of the nearly two-year probe to Congress and making them available to the public. Mueller officially concluded his investigation late last month and submitted the confidential report to

Special counsel Robert Mueller arrives at his office Monday in Washington. [AP / J. SCOTT APPLEWHITE]

Barr. Two days later, the attorney general sent Congress a four-page letter that detailed Mueller's "principal conclusions." In his letter, Barr said the special counsel did not find a criminal conspiracy between Russia and Trump associates during the campaign. However, contrary to Trump's false claim, Mueller did not reach a conclusion on whether Trump obstructed justice. Instead, Mueller presented evidence on both sides of that question. Barr said he did not believe the evidence was sufficient to prove that Trump had obstructed justice, but he noted that Mueller's team did not exonerate the president. Portions of the report being released by the Justice Department will be redacted to protect grand jury material, sensitive intelligence, matters that could affect ongoing investigations and damage to the privacy rights of third parties, the attorney general has said. The scores of outstanding questions about the investigation have not stopped the president and his allies from declaring victory. They have painted House Democrats' investigations as partisan overreach and have targeted news outlets and individual reporters they say have promoted the collusion story. The president himself seethed at a political rally that the whole thing was an attempt "to tear up the fabric of our great democracy." He has told confidants in recent days that he was certain the full report would back up his claims of vindication but was also convinced the media would manipulate the findings in an effort to damage him, according to two Republicans close to the White House not authorized to speak publicly about private conversations. In the waiting game's final days, the White House continued to try to shape the narrative. "There was no obstruction, which I don't how you can interpret that any other way than total exoneration," press secretary Sanders said on "Fox News Sunday."

While the president unleashed his personal grievances, his team seized on any exculpatory information in Barr's letter, hoping to define the conversation in advance, according to White House officials and outside advisers who spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to publicly discuss private deliberations. The victory lap was deliberately premature, they said. But Trump's inner circle knows there will likely be further releases of embarrassing or politically damaging information. Barr's letter, for instance, hinted that there would be at least one unknown action by the president that Mueller examined as a possible act of obstruction. A number of White House aides have privately said they are eager for all Russia stories, good or bad, to fade from the headlines. And there is fear among some presidential confidants that the rush to spike the football in celebration could backfire if bombshell new information emerges.

Warren lays plan for fossil fuel leases

By Elana Schor
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Elizabeth Warren is vowing to prohibit new fossil fuel leasing on public lands if she's elected president, one of several new energy proposals she rolled out on Monday before a campaign swing in two Western states.

Warren, a U.S. senator from Massachusetts, already has launched more than a half-dozen new proposals since entering the Democratic presidential primary, outpacing her many rivals in a calculated bid to lead 2020's ideas race. The latest addition to her policy agenda aims to reverse the significant climb in drilling on public lands under President Donald Trump while fleshing out her approach to climate change, a key issue for her party's liberal base.

Besides an executive order barring new fossil fuel leases on public lands on shore and offshore, Warren said Monday that she would work toward boosting U.S. electricity generation from renewable sources offshore or on public lands. Her plan also includes free entry to national parks, the reinstatement of Obama-era environmental policies Trump rolled back and the creation of a service program to help maintain public lands.

"Any serious effort to address climate change must include public lands — fossil fuel extraction in these areas is responsible for nearly a quarter of all U.S. greenhouse gas emissions," Warren wrote in a Monday blog post announcing her proposals.

Warren is set to discuss the public lands policies this week during campaign stops in South Carolina, Colorado and Utah.

Her proposals, particularly the bid to end new fossil fuel leasing on public lands, are likely to draw plaudits from environmental groups while running afoul of the oil and gas industry, which has benefited from millions of acres of public land offered for lease since Trump took office. Advocacy groups had urged then-President Barack Obama to halt new leases on federal land without success.

However, the Trump administration's plans for new offshore drilling have sparked legal challenges of their own, including one affecting tests on the Atlantic coast that's backed by the Republican attorney general of South Carolina.

Dan Naatz, senior vice president at the Independent Petroleum Association of America, warned that Warren's proposal to end new fossil fuel leases on public lands "would damage our economy and negatively impact job growth in communities" nationwide.

"The royalties, rental fees and bonus bid revenues" from leasing, Naatz said in a statement, "which are evenly split between the federal government and the states where the development occurred, play a vital role in the state and local economies of states and tribal communities."

Warren's bid for a dramatic increase in renewable electricity generation on public land and offshore is a major turnabout from current policy. She acknowledged in her blog post that her goal is "nearly ten times what we are currently generating" but billed it as achievable.

The evergreen nightmare

Last week, the Rhode Island House put special interests and campaign contributors ahead of beleaguered taxpayers in voting 62-9 to require communities to pay firefighters overtime well beyond federal standards.

But that was not the only shocking assault on those who foot the bill for Rhode Island government.

One day later, before an audience packed with labor lobbyists, the House Labor Committee voted 10-1 in favor of “evergreen” contracts for teachers and other municipal unions, which would allow contract provisions to outlast a contract, weakening the negotiating power of local communities.

Once again, House members ignored the pleas of local officials, who are already dealing with enormous financial burdens while hitting homeowners with some of the nation’s highest property taxes.

Journal Political Writer Katherine Gregg (“Evergreen contract bill for public unions clears House panel,” April 11) cited some of the concerns.

Providence Mayor Jorge Elorza sent a letter, asking lawmakers: “Why would any group of employees come to the negotiating table when it is clear that they are expected to make concessions?”

Johnston Mayor Joseph Polisena, in another letter, warned: “Automatic contract extension” would give public employee unions “no incentive to re-negotiate a contract if they are expected to make concessions on wages, health care or work conditions.”

The Portsmouth Town Council sent a resolution opposing legislation that would place the town at a disadvantage during contract negotiations.

Burrillville Town Manager Michael Wood recalled a prolonged struggle over a teachers’ contract during an economic downturn, when cuts in state aid were “basically crushing our budgets and ability to pay for contract proposals.” The teachers adopted a work-to-rule approach, “which is a hard-line union tactic that is used to try and force school committees (politically) to accept terms and conditions that they can’t afford.

“Quite frankly, political benefits granted to the unions at the expense of Rhode Island taxpayers is, in my opinion, a terrible idea, especially at times when balancing budgets in difficult economic circumstances is required.”

On these pages (“Labor interests dig into your wallet,” Commentary, April 7), Brian Daniels, the executive director of the Rhode Island League of Cities and Towns, sounded a similar warning: “Without an expiration date to compel parties to negotiate, municipal officials will not be able to make realistic and needed changes — particularly in a recession when employees are better off keeping what they already have.”

In 2017, Gov. Gina Raimondo bravely vetoed similar legislation, explaining it would hurt the public’s position in contract negotiations and lock cities and towns “into contractual provisions they can no longer afford.”

But, ominously, the teachers unions backed her reelection last November. Now she says she supports the legislation, claiming it has been fine-tuned to please municipal leaders. We see no evidence of that, given the heavy opposition to it.

Here are the numbers to call to try to derail this effort: House Speaker Nicholas Mattiello, (401) 222-2466; Senate President Dominick Ruggerio, (401) 222-6655; Governor Raimondo, (401) 222-2080.

But we warn you: State House leaders in this session seem to care little about the rising burden on taxpayers and the serious financial troubles of local cities and towns. Safely beyond last November’s election, they appear intent on shoveling taxpayer dollars into the maw of the special interests that helped put them in office.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Labor unions crush the people of Rhode Island

A smart person knows to surrender to superior forces when the outcome is all but inevitable. As a Rhode resident and taxpayer, I am raising the white flag to the General Assembly and to the public sector unions.

Paul Valletta, a firefighter and lobbyist, got House Speaker Nicholas Mattiello to push out a bill that would supersede federal labor laws regarding overtime pay for firefighters. Great for the unions, bad for the taxpayers.

In the Senate, the Labor Committee is stacked with politicians who work for labor unions.

With this bill all but secured, the public unions have set their sights on evergreen contracts and binding arbitration bills that would neutralize fiscal control by the cities and towns. Rhode Island cities and towns are not some rogue enemy institution.

Sadly, neither they nor I stand a chance when nearly 100% of the General Assembly is nothing more than an arm of the public unions. I have no issue with firefighters, police or teachers, but our one-sided government is why our tax burdens are so high, why the citizens do not have more disposable income, why state and local infrastructure is in poor shape and why our business climate is terrible.

Pence can’t be moral if he supports Trump

It really bothers me that so many people, especially evangelicals and their leaders, praise Vice President Mike Pence for his Christian values and high moral ethics. It seems to me he picks and chooses what moral ethic he deems inappropriate. After all, he supports a president whose actions are completely devoid of Christian values.

President Trump is the great deceiver. He deceives the American people on a daily basis with the lies that are spewed from his mouth. Why does Pence support such a person? I wonder if he remembers the saying “you can not serve two masters”?

Rich college students feast while poor go hungry

The recent opening of a food pantry at the Community College of Rhode Island or its most-needy students — on the heels of The Providence Journal’s exposé about exclusive, all-expenses-paid networking dinners for Brown University’s most privileged students — paints a stark and disturbing portrait of the vast inequalities among higher education students.

The Journal reported that the average family income at Brown is $204,900, with 19% of students coming from the top 1% of the income scale. Recently, Brown partnered with former trustee and textile executive Martin J. Granoff to invite its most privileged students to mix and mingle with well-connected alumni and trustees at Bacaro Restaurant in Providence.

In sharp contrast, CCRI has just opened a food pantry to help address the basic human needs of its students — one in four of whom is food-insecure. According to CCRI, food insecurity is even more severe for first-generation students and students of color, with 57% of African-American students and 56% of first-generation college students reporting hunger.

In our country, we like to believe that higher education is the great equalizer, opening doors to opportunity and advancement. But, as recent college admissions scandals remind us, the children of the super-rich are born on third base while most others struggle just to get onto the field.

If we are serious about leveling the playing field, perhaps we can skip the next meal at Bacaro and lend a hand to those who are struggling against all odds to lift themselves up by their bootstraps.

MY TURN ANDY MOFFIT

It’s time to end student hunger

One in six Rhode Island kids face hunger issues. That’s an alarming reality.

As a parent, I know that my kids can’t be their best if they don’t start the day with a good breakfast.

As an elementary school teacher years ago, I saw firsthand how hard it was for my students to focus — and to learn — when they hadn’t eaten breakfast, or when they didn’t know where their next meal was coming from.

The data is clear: student hunger results in poor health and poor test scores.

That’s why I support No Student Hungry, an initiative by my wife, Gov. Gina Raimondo, to ensure that no student from pre-K to college goes hungry at school. Right now, thousands of Rhode Island kids are missing out on free meals they are eligible to receive under federal law at no additional cost to the state. Only half of all students eligible for the federal free breakfast program receive a breakfast at school every day, and only about a quarter of schools eligible to serve universal free meals are doing so.

That’s where No Student Hungry comes in. The proposal will increase student meals participation by requiring eligible schools to serve universal breakfast and lunch — and serve breakfast after the school bell rings. While just over half of eligible students typically receive breakfast, schools that offer universal free breakfast and breakfast after the bell see participation rates of 70 percent. And we’ll support districts with implementation to make the transition as easy as possible.

Several schools in Rhode Island are already leading the way. Thanks to widespread implementation of the universal meals program and alternative breakfast options, Providence Public Schools now provide almost 70% of their eligible students with a school breakfast every day. Last year, after launching a breakfast after the bell program, Waterman Elementary School in Cranston increased breakfast participation from 11% to 38% in just five months.

Kids aren’t the only ones who stand to benefit from ending student hunger — our economy would also see a boost. If we’re able to increase participation in the school breakfast program alone from 50% to 70%, we’ll receive nearly $3 million in additional federal funds. Given that Rhode Island leads the nation in farm-to-school participation, a significant portion of that $3 million would support our local food economy.

Hunger doesn’t just affect students in K-12 schools, I’m afraid. Up to half of college students report being food insecure. Under federal rules, low-income students who would otherwise qualify for Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program benefits must work at least 20 hours a week to qualify, something that’s impossible for many. No Student Hungry will make it easier for low-income college students to qualify for these benefits by creating targeted work-study programs for eligible students.

The bottom line is that if No Student Hungry passes, thousands of additional Rhode Island students will receive breakfast and lunch at no additional cost to the state. And struggling college students will gain access to resources that will ensure they don’t go hungry while they’re studying for a degree.

This issue is critical. But thankfully, it’s solvable. We owe it to our kids to get this done.

Andy Moffit is Rhode Island’s first gentleman.

Birds hammer Boston in Patriots' Day matinee

Baltimore's bats jump all over Red Sox pitching

By Bill Doyle
The Worcester Telegram & Gazette

BOSTON — It was Patriots' Day, but it wasn't the Red Sox' day. Then again, far too few days have been Sox days this season. The Sox collected a season-low four hits and lost to the Orioles, 8-1, at Fenway Park on Monday in their annual Patriots' Day game to fall to 6-11 for the first time since 2011. They didn't suffer their 11th loss last season until May 9 when they dropped a 9-6 decision at Yankee Stadium to fall into second place in the A.L. East. The Sox will open a two-game series at Yankee Stadium at 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday. Maybe the intensity of playing their arch rivals will get the Sox going. "Anywhere is a good place for it to happen," Mitch Moreland said, "but it might as well start there." "I don't think Yankee Stadium has anything to do with it," Mookie Betts said. "I think it's just going out and continuing to play. That's all we can do." After starting the season 3-8 on the road, the Red Sox expected to fare better at home. They did, but Fenway wasn't quite as friendly as they hoped. Playing Toronto and Baltimore, rebuilding teams with no realistic expectations to contend this season, the Sox managed to only split six games. "I know it's rough, I know it's tough," Xander Bogaerts said. "We've just got to continue showing up every day, as I said, with that winning mentality. I know we're going to go on a nice run, I just don't know when. It would be nice to go on one pretty soon. The Sox split the series, 2-2, with the Orioles, who had lost eight of their previous nine games. The reigning World Series champions have not won a series of any kind this season. They're 0-3-2 so far. But on Boston Marathon day, fans should remember that the baseball season is also a marathon, not a sprint. "It will get better," Sox manager Alex Cora insisted. "There's no timetable. Toronto takes 2-1 series lead behind Matthews, Johnsson

The Associated Press

TORONTO — Auston Matthews scored his first goal of the playoffs and set up another as the Toronto Maple Leafs beat the Boston Bruins, 3-2, on Monday night to take a 2-1 lead in their best-of-seven Eastern Conference quarterfinal. Andreas Johnsson, also with a goal and an assist, and Trevor Moore provided the rest of the offense for Toronto. Frederik Andersen made 34 saves. David Krejci and Charlie Coyle scored for Boston. Tuukka Rask stopped 31 shots in front of a crowd of 19,611. The Maple Leafs won the series opener, 4-1, last Wednesday in Boston before losing by the same score on Saturday. Game 4 is Wednesday night in Toronto. Less than an hour before puck drop, the Maple Leafs learned that center Nazem Kadri had been suspended for the rest of the series for his vicious cross-check to the head of Bruins winger Jake DeBrusk in the third period of Game 2. first period in which the Maple Leafs upped their physical play after getting dominated in Game 2. But the offensive floodgates opened with five goals in the second. Toronto took a 1-0 lead at 2:38 when Moore poked a loose puck home for his first career playoff goal after Morgan Rielly's initial shot rattled around between Rask's pads. The Maple Leafs' fourth line of Moore, Frederik Gauthier and Tyler Ennis were effective all night, with a couple of grinding shifts in the offensive zone. Boston replied 52 seconds later when Krejci chipped a bouncing puck past Andersen with DeBrusk also on the doorstep. Rask stopped John

Tavares later in the period, but the Maple Leafs center was checked into the Bruins goalie by defenseman Charlie McAvoy. Rask went tumbling backward, but stayed in the game SEE BRUINS, B8

BOSTON — Lawrence Cherono entered the 123rd Boston Marathon having covered 26.2 miles faster than anyone in the field after scorching the flat track in Amsterdam to the tune of just over 2 hours and 4 minutes last fall. The 30-year-old Kenyan didn't come close to his personal-record time on Monday, which was to be expected because of the hilly trek from Hopkinton to Copley Square. But he was the fastest,

BOSTON — Jordan Hasay made her marathon debut here in 2017, finished third and set an American women's debut record — by three minutes — in the process. "I was grateful to be back out there," said the 27-year-old Hasay, who grew up in Arroyo Grande, Calif. "I'm proud to get the Americans on the podium again." Degefa's winning time was 2 hours, 23 minutes, 31 seconds. Kiplagat was second in 2:24:23 and Hasay finished in 2:25:20. He finished with 11 goals and 73 points in 121 career games, with four goals and a career-high 28 points in 42 games this season.

Thornton penalized

San Jose Sharks center Joe Thornton was suspended on Monday for one playoff game for a hit to the head of Vegas' Tomas Nosek. The NHL's Department of Player Safety said that Thornton's hit on Nosek in Game 3 was avoidable and that the head was "clearly the main point of contact." That led to the decision to suspend Thornton for Game 4 on Tuesday night in Las Vegas.

Romanchuk is first American wheelchair winner since '93

By Rich Garven and Jennifer Toland
The Worcester Telegram & Gazette

BOSTON — Daniel Romanchuk won the men's wheelchair division at the New York City and Chicago marathons last fall by a combined two seconds.

The 20-year-old Maryland native dispensed with the drama on an overcast and humid Monday morning, breaking away at Mile 17 and going on to win the Boston Marathon by nearly three minutes.

"I planned putting in a surge around there," said Romanchuk, who was born with spina bifida, a birth defect that occurs when the spine and spinal cord don't align properly. "I didn't know what would come of it, but it ended up breaking the pack up."

It was a historic victory as Romanchuk became the first American to win here since 1993 and the youngest Boston champion.

His time of 1 hour, 21 minutes, 36 seconds is the fastest ever recorded by an American at Boston, which has had a wheelchair division since 1975.

"Certainly a lot of big things that happened, but I'm still processing them right now and it's going to take a while," said Romanchuk, who pocketed $25,000 for his win.

champion Masazumi Soejima of Japan was second and four-time defending champion Marcel Hug of Switzerland, who finished second to Romanchuk at New York and Chicago, placed third.

Schar wins women's race

On the way to the start line in Hopkinton on Monday morning, it was raining heavily and Manuela Schar was concerned.

"I think last year was still in our heads," said Schar, recalling the cold, wet and windy conditions of 2018. "I had a bad experience last year."

Schar, who set a world record (1:28:17) in the women's wheelchair division here in 2017, did not finish last year's race.

By the time the wheelchair races began at 9 a.m. on Monday, the rain had subsided to mist, the temperature was 60 degrees and winds were calm.

The 34-year-old Schar, of Switzerland, took off and dominated the field.

Her winning time of 1 hour, 34 minutes, 19 seconds was 7:16 faster than runner-up Tatyana McFadden of the United States.

"I learned today that you say you have 'unfinished business,'" Schar said. "We (in Switzerland) say we have 'an open bill,' so I was really ... I wanted this. So I'm really happy how it turned out."

The victory extended a great stretch for Schar, who has won five straight marathons. She crossed the line first in Berlin last September, Chicago in October, New York in November and Tokyo last month.

"Every race is different," Schar said. "I'm always nervous before a race and I always want to give my best."

10 marathons, including wins at Honolulu in 2016 and 2017. He set a personal record (PR) and a course record with a winning time of 2:04:06 at Amsterdam in October.

Cherono earned $150,000 for his latest win. Although Desisa came up short in his bid to win Boston for a third time, he was pleased with his performance.

"After 40K (24.8 miles) I decided to sprint to win," Desisa said. "I'm very happy because last year I couldn't finish because of bad weather. This year I came to Boston like a champion, so I'm very happy."

The Americans placed two runners in the top 10, down from six in each of the last two years. Scott Fauble of Flagstaff, Ariz., was seventh in 2:09:09 and Jared Ward of Mapleton, Utah, was eighth in 2:09:25.

Fauble's time was a personal best by more than three minutes while Ward sliced a full minute off his PR. As an added bonus, both runners automatically qualified for the U.S. Olympic Trials in Atlanta in February by virtue of their top-10 showings.

"Scott and I feel this way and a lot of the other American athletes that were in this race and not in this race think we're sub-2:10 guys," Ward said. "We just need the right race for that to come together and today it came together for Scott and I."

Fauble shared the lead after the first mile, which gave him an early surge of adrenaline.

"When I was leading, I was thinking, 'Holy beep, I'm leading the beeping Boston Marathon,' " Fauble, 27, said. "It was such a surreal experience to be leading a race I grew up watching on TV and kind of idolized the race and the experience."

Fauble and Ward shared the lead at Mile 9 and regained it ahead of a pack of 14 at Mile 17 after having entered the Newton Hills. The frontrunners had been reduced to eight in number four miles later at Heartbreak Hill with Fauble right out front.

The group, dominated by Kenyans and Ethiopians, were mixing it up, charging up the hills and recharging on the descents. So Fauble made his move.

"I knew when we got over Heartbreak that if they were going to keep playing the cat-and-mouse game, that was not going to be good for me," Fauble said. "I just wanted to get in my top gear and grind, basically time trial the last four or five miles as fast as I could go."

"And maybe that's not the best decision tactically, but that was going to be the best

Scary fall

McFadden, the defending champion and a five-time winner in Boston, overcame a scary fall at Mile 6 when her wheel hit the train tracks.

"The crowd was like, 'Oh!' and 'Ah!' and I got back up and they were clapping and cheering," McFadden said. "I'm lucky I stayed in. I just flipped over completely and then had to get back up. I just kind of kept going. It shocked me for a second (because) I have never flipped over on this course, but the tracks up there, they are rubber and it just caught me the right way to flip me over. I had a lot of ground to make up. So, I'm ready for next year."

decision for me ... and I got dropped pretty quickly."

Soon there would be four and then three and, finally, two as Cherono took charge with splits of 4:32 and 4:39 — the McFadden finished in 1:41:35. Madison De Rozario of Australia was third in 1:41:36.

Moment of silence

Race organizers and city officials held a moment of silence in tribute to those who were killed or wounded in the 2013 finish-line bombings.

The bells of Old South Church were rung at 2:49 p.m. — six years to the minute after the first of two bombs exploded on Boylston Street. Three people were killed and more than 260 were injured in the attacks on April 15, 2013.

Monday marked the first time since the attacks that the marathon was run on April 15. The date since has been designated One Boston Day, a day dedicated to acts of service and kindness across the city.

Special racer

Two-time winner Boston Marathon winner Joan Benoit Samuelson finished Monday's race in 3 hours, 4 minutes on the 40th anniversary of her first victory. Samuelson, 61, wore bib No. 1979.

"The crowd was fantastic," Linden said. "There was a certain celebratory feel out there and the run down Boylston was pretty special."

"I love this course and I love this city," Linden, 35, said. "I always come in giving everything I have. Today that was fifth."

Unlike last year, when cold, wet and windy conditions played a major factor, weather was not really an issue on Monday. By the time the elite women were at the start line in Hopkinton, early morning heavy rain had cleared. It was 61 degrees, overcast and humid with calm winds.

Hasay missed out on a banner day for American women last year. In addition to Linden's historic victory, the U.S. claimed six of the top eight spots.

Monday marked just the third time Hasay, who was an 18-time All-American at the University of Oregon, ran a marathon. She was also third at the 2017 Chicago Marathon. Foot issues caused her to miss last year's Chicago Marathon.

"I was grateful to be toeing the line again," Hasay said. "I just wanted to prove that I belong back out there."

Once Degefa broke off, Hasay remained with the chase pack.

"Des said, 'There's a long race to go; just be patient,' " Hasay said. "I still get a little anxious with all the different surges, but I figured, if I followed her, I was definitely running the tangents, she knows the course really well. It was really fun. I was just competing. Once Edna made that strong move, I just tried to close hard and was in fourth so I was just proud to catch back on third."

Hasay has her sights set on the 2020 Summer Olympics in Tokyo.

Other than on TV, the 38-year-old Degefa had never seen the Boston Marathon course.

American Sara Hall, who celebrated her 36th birthday on Monday, led the pack for the first couple of miles before Degefa made her move.

"I know I have some speed," Degefa said through an interpreter, "so I pushed myself after five miles."

In Dubai in January, Degefa set an Ethiopian national marathon record with her 2:17:41 second-place finish and with that result became the fourth fastest women's marathoner in history.

Her six-mile split was 5:13 and by the 10-mile mark.

Degefa opened up a 77-second lead. The gap grew to three minutes as she approached the Newton Hills.

"You know her ability, you know what she's done in Dubai and you wonder how it translates to this course," Linden said. "When she started putting down these super quick miles, you say this is her race to lose. Let her go and hope she might come back."

Degefa's pace did slow through the hills. Her Mile 19 split was 5:29, Mile 20 5:45 and Mile 21 5:47.

Kiplagat, who was ninth last year, made her move as she passed Boston College and by Kenmore Square had Degefa in her sights.

Degefa, though, picked it up again and won fairly comfortably.

"I thought that maybe if I keep increasing the pace I might reach her before the finish line," Kiplagat said, "but as I broke away from the group at the (22-Mile mark) I decided to make a strong second, but when I was at (24 miles) I realize the race is almost over and the gap was still big and so I (knew that I was not) going to make it."

Degefa is historically a half-marathon specialist and made her marathon debut in 2017 with a win in Dubai.

Vazquez gets first MLB start at second

By Bill Doyle
The Worcester Telegram & Gazette

BOSTON — During his five major-league seasons, Christian Vazquez has caught in 291 regular-season games, served as designated hitter in six and played third base in four. He also filled in at first base for six innings during the 18-inning Game 3 of the World Series last fall.

But he had never played second base in the majors until Monday in an 8-1 loss to the Orioles at Fenway Park.

The Red Sox needed a second baseman because Dustin Pedroia served as the DH as the team brings him along slowly while he recovers from a knee injury, Brock Holt is sidelined with a scratched cornea and manager Alex Cora said he wanted to stay away from playing Eduardo Nunez at second, but he didn’t really explain why. Nunez may have caught the illness that has sidelined center fielder Jackie Bradley Jr.

So Vazquez played second base for the first time since 2010 when he successfully handled all three chances he had over 4 2/3 innings for Class-A Greenville.

“Ground balls, I’m going to block it,” Vazquez said before the game. “I’ve got a cup. Don’t worry.”

Before games, Vazquez takes grounders at first, second and third and turns double plays to improve his footwork as a catcher. It’s something he picked up from Cardinals catcher Yadier Molina.

“We’re comfortable with him,” Cora said before the game. “His baseball IQ is good, too. It wouldn’t surprise me if he turns a few double plays and he throws behind the runner or something like that. He’s very excited.”

Vazquez made Cora look good by fielding Dwight Smith’s grounder and throwing to second to begin a double play to end the first inning.

“He was smooth, man,” shortstop Xander Bogaerts said. “Obviously, behind the dish he’s pretty smooth so I didn’t think we would have a problem with him back there.”

In the second inning, Vazquez made a nice play in catching a throw by center fielder Mookie Betts and diving to tag out Renato Nunez trying for a double. Rio Ruiz scored from second on the play.

In the fifth, Vazquez ranged to his right to backhand a grounder and threw out Cedric Mullins at first.

“It was fun, something different,” Vazquez said.

Should Pedroia worry about Vazquez taking his second base job permanently?

“No, he’s the MVP,” Vazquez said.

Pedroia, the 2008 A.L. MVP, was originally scheduled to start at second base, but he switched to designated hitter a couple of hours before the game. After undergoing left knee surgery in October of 2017, Pedroia played in only three games last season and he rejoined the team last week after playing three rehab games with Greenville.

“We have to take care of

PawSox play two today

Monday night’s PawSox game against the Buffalo Bisons at McCoy Stadium was postponed due to rain and wet field conditions. It will be made up as part of a single-admission doubleheader on Tuesday beginning at 4:05 p.m. at McCoy Stadium. Both games will be seven innings. Gates at McCoy will open at 3:30 p.m.

Fans with field box, reserved box or general admission tickets for Monday (without a specific rainout date printed on them) can trade those in for any remaining regular-season game at McCoy based on availability.

him,” Cora said. “We have a program, we have to be disciplined. We were pushing him to play second, but then it doesn’t make sense. If something happens today with him, then it’s on us. The only thing we can do honestly is DH him and keep him off his feet as much as possible, not push him so hard. It’s a tough start, it’s tough conditions.”

Pedroia went 0-for-4 to drop his batting average to .105 (2-for-19).

Blake Swihart played two innings at second base for the Sox last year and Steve Pearce played 15 games there in 2016 for Tampa Bay and Baltimore. But Cora wanted to give Vazquez a break from behind the plate after he caught the previous three games. So Swihart caught and Pearce played left field. He made a sliding catch in the sixth to save at least one run.

Bradley is sick and left fielder Andrew Benintendi didn’t play either after leaving Sunday’s game after fouling a ball off his right foot. Cora said they’re both feeling better, but he’s not sure if they’ll be ready to play on Tuesday at Yankee Stadium.

Honoring Robinson

All players wore No. 42 on their jerseys to honor Jackie Robinson on the 72nd anniversary of his first game with the Brooklyn Dodgers when he became the first African American to play Major League Baseball.

Sale in New York

Hoping an extra day of rest will improve his performance, Chris Sale (0-3, 9.00) will start at Yankee Stadium at 6:35 p.m. on Tuesday against New York’s James Paxton (1-2, 6.00) when the Sox open a two-game seriesl. ... Reliever Marcus Walden was optioned to Triple-A Pawtucket after Monday’s game. No corresponding move was immediately announced.

and activities are limited to strength and conditioning and physical rehabilitation.

Phase Two, which lasts three weeks, involves on-field workouts and includes individual player instruction and drills. The team practices but on a separate basis. That means no live contact or offensive vs. defense drills.

Phase Three is where the fun starts. During that four-week period, teams hold 10 days of OTAs. No live contact is permitted, but teams can hold offense vs. defense 11-on-11, 9-on-9 and 7-on-7 drills.

For the Patriots, OTAs start on May 20 and go through June 11. Along with the 10 OTA practices, the Patriots will also hold a three-day mandatory minicamp June 4-6.

Jones signs tender

The Patriots slot cornerback is officially back in the fold.

According to a source, Jonathan Jones signed his one-year restricted free-agent tender on Monday. The 25-year-old will earn $3.095 million in 2019 and will become an unrestricted free agent next offseason.

Jones’ return was all but guaranteed. Back in March, the Patriots placed a second-round tender on the restricted free agent. If a team tried to sign Jones to an offer sheet, the Patriots would have been received that team’s second-round pick had they not matched the offer.

Jones is a solid piece of the Patriots defense. Last season, he finished with three interceptions, seven passes defended and 1.5 sacks in 16 games. Jones’ play in the AFC Championship Game was instrumental as he shut down Pro Bowl receiver Tyreek Hill of the Chiefs. When the Patriots lost Patrick Chung to injury in the Super Bowl, Jones stepped up and played safety.

An undrafted free agent in 2016, Jones has been a solid slot corner and a core special-teams player.

All the numbers just not adding up for Sale

Drop in fastball velocity has been most concerning so far

By Neil Greenberg
The Washington Post

The Boston Red Sox were supposed to contend with the New York Yankees for the American League East title this season. Instead, they are 6-11 and limping into a series against the Yankees beginning on Tuesday. Chris Sale, the team’s ace, is at the heart of the matter, and if he doesn’t improve soon, the Red Sox will be playing catch-up all season.

Sale is 0-3 with a 9.00 ERA, his 13 earned runs in 2019 more than a third of the 37 runs he allowed over 27 starts all of last year. He is striking out a career-low 13 percent of batters faced and walking almost 7 percent, his highest rate since 2012 as a member of the Chicago White Sox. His swinging strike percentage (10.5 percent) is also at its lowest point since 2012, and hitters are making better contact against him than they have in the last four years, hitting the ball on the sweet spot of the bat once out of every 12 balls put in play.

The most concerning stat for Sale, and the Red Sox, is his four-seam fastball velocity, which has tumbled from an average of 95.6 mph in 2018 to 91.5 mph this season, the most noticeable dip occurring after suffering a shoulder injury late last season. The injury could be a lingering issue but that didn’t stop the team from inking the 30-year-old to a five-year, $145-million contract extension this winter.

Regardless, the effectiveness of Sale’s fastball is nowhere near where it needs to be. Batters aren’t swinging as much on his fastball because Sale isn’t throwing it in the zone as often — down from 53 percent to 41 percent in just one season. The swinging strike rate on this pitch is also a paltry 1.3 percent.

“The stuff, we know, wasn’t there,” Cora has told the Boston Herald. “I think the off-speed pitch is the one that, he’s not consistent with it. Everyone talks about the fastball, but for me, it’s the slider. It’s the best slider in the game, and right now it’s not that.”

Sale’s slider, used against both right- and left-handed batters, has been a commanding pitch. From 2017 to 2018, batters hit just .181 against the pitch with 141 strikeouts over 276 at-bats. This year, batters are hitting .217 against it with four strikeouts in 23 at-bats, illustrating it is still an effective offering. And its decline is nowhere near the decline of his fastball. For example, his slider saved the team over two runs per 100 times thrown in 2018, which has dropped to break even in 2019. His fastball, on the other hand, saved the team nearly a run every 100 times thrown last year but is now costing the Red Sox six runs per 100 times thrown in 2019 — the worst rate among starting pitchers.

The rest of the starting rotation also doesn’t appear to be able to pick up the slack. Entering Monday’s game, it has a combined 6.17 FIP — a team’s ERA over a given period of time if the pitcher were to have experienced league-average results on balls in play and league-average timing — second worst only to the Baltimore Orioles (6.41 FIP) largely in part to allowing 28 more runs to score than we would expect given the number of outs and men on base during each plate appearance, the most in the majors and eight more than the next worst rotation, the Chicago White Sox.

Here’s the bottom line: Sale was projected to be the most valuable pitcher in the American League this year (5.8 wins above replacement) and the second most valuable pitcher in the majors after New York Mets ace Jacob deGrom. One win may not sound like a lot but consider how tight the race is in the A.L. East. New York has a 57-percent chance to win the division with 95 wins, the Tampa Bay Rays have the next-best chance at 25 percent (91 wins) followed by Boston (18 percent, 89 wins). The Red Sox are now barely above a 50/50 chance to make the playoffs, per FanGraphs. They were given a 90-percent chance to make the playoffs at the start of the season.

BOYS

DREW JALBERT

South County Co-op, Freshman Swimmer of the Year Nominee
It was quite the state meet debut for the freshman. Jalbert, who goes to Prout, led from start to finish in the 200 individual medley to claim the first gold of his career. He had a short break and then finished third in the 100 butterfly. Those performances, combined with second-place in the 200 free relay and third-place in the 200 medley relay, helped South County finish third in its inaugural season.

ETHAN O'CONNOR

Barrington, Senior Swimmer of the Year Nominee
For the third straight winter, O'Connor came away with two gold medals at the state meet. The senior closed out his career with his third straight win in the 50 freestyle and added a gold in the 100 backstroke. He also picked up two golds as part of the Eagles' winning 200 medley and 400 free relay teams. O'Connor finished his career with 14 state gold medals.

CJ SHELDON

Hendricken, Sophomore Swimmer of the Year Nominee
After winning gold as a relay swimmer for the Hawks in 2018, Sheldon got it done on his own this year. Sheldon won the 200 freestyle in dominating fashion for his first state individual gold, then added his second with a win in the 100 free with an equally impressive performance. Sheldon repeated as a relay champ in the 200 free relay and helped the Hawks win the state team title.

COLEMAN FLYNN

Moses Brown, Sophomore
Flynn certainly made a name for himself at the state meet this season. The sophomore started with his first silver medal, taking second in the 200 IM with a time of 1:57.75 — .75 off the lead. Flynn topped it in his next individual event, winning his first gold in the 100 breaststroke with a time of 1:00.37. The Quakers star will enter next season as a favorite for double gold.

IAN HORSTKAMP

Cumberland, Junior
Most other years the Clippers star would have been a double-gold winner, but this season he had to settle for two impressive second-place finishes. He opened his state meet by finishing second in the 200-yard freestyle, well behind Hendricken's CJ Sheldon. Things were closer in the 100 butterfly, where Horstkamp's 51.29 finish was only .36 off the winning time. The two silvers bested his sophomore campaign, during which he finished sixth in the 200 and fourth in the butterfly.

RHYS JOHNSTONE

Westerly, Senior
It didn't end with a gold medal, but the senior certainly saved his best for last in his final state meet. In what was his best performance as a Bulldog, Johnstone gave Barrington's Ethan O'Connor a run for his money in the 50 free, finishing .22 behind to take second. His next event, the 100 backstroke, Johnstone finished behind O'Connor again, swimming a 51.91 for the second silver of his career.

TYLER LUTZ

Lincoln, Freshman
The freshman looks like a linebacker and swims with power and finesse that should make him fun to watch the next three years. His state-meet debut saw him finish fourth in the 200 free, but his second event went much better. In the 500-yard freestyle, Lutz set the pace from start to finish with a time of 4:45.88, giving him the first of what should be many golds.

WES REA

South County Co-op, Senior
He was a medalist for three seasons, but finally got a gold in his last state meet. Rea, a senior at Prout, swam a 50.93 in the 100 butterfly to beat Cumberland's Ian Horstkamp by .36 seconds. Rea also finished fifth in the 200 free and was part of the second-place 200 free relay team and the third-place 200 medley relay, helping South County finish third as a team.

MICHAEL RYAN

Hendricken, Senior
A crucial cog in the Hendricken machine, Ryan was invaluable to the Hawks' success as they won yet another state title. A freestyle specialist, the senior finished third in the 200 freestyle and was second in the 500 freestyle. Ryan added a relay gold medal, swimming on Hendricken's 400 freestyle relay team that closed out the state meet. It was Ryan's second career gold in the event.

200 Medley Relay

Barrington: Jackson Bennett, Sophomore; Andrew Barton, Junior; Ethan O'Connor, Senior; Gor Bagumyan, Senior
The foursome got the Eagles' meet started off on the right foot, as Barrington won the 200 medley relay for the fourth straight season. O'Connor was the only returning member of last year's team, but it didn't matter. Bennett swam a solid start, Barton's second leg got the Eagles to the front of the pack, O'Connor dominated and Bagumyan had no problem finishing the race off.

200 Freestyle Relay

For the third straight season, the 200 freestyle relay belonged to the Hawks. Blanchette and Sheldon returned from last year's winning team and Hendricken didn't skip a beat. Blanchette opened with a time of 22.94 seconds in his 50 yards, followed by Fedorenko going 22.33 that put the Hawks in the lead for good. Walden extended the lead with a 22.40 and Sheldon cruised in his 50 with a time of 21.23 to bring home the gold.

Few things are more fun than punctuating a state team title with a big performance, but that's what this Hawks foursome did in the 400 free relay. After Barrington won the state meet's final event the last two years, Hendricken reclaimed the title. Walden got the start Hendricken needed and Smith put the Hawks in the lead for good with his second leg. That allowed Ryan to lengthen the gap and Sheldon to shut the door.

SECOND TEAM

Sam Steen, Portsmouth, sophomore
Grant Dator, Hendricken, junior
Troy Feng, Wheeler, senior
McGovern Brown, Lincoln, junior
Matthew Coughlin, Portsmouth, junior
Max Hamann, Moses Brown, sophomore

200 Freestyle Relay: South County Co-op (Teddy Evans, Senior; Aidan Carberry, Junior; Drew Jalbert, Freshman; Wes Rea, Senior)
400 Freestyle Relay: Barrington (Gabe Arriagada, Senior; William Kaon, Senior; Gor Bagumyan, Senior; Ethan O'Connor, Senior)

BOYS LACROSSE EXETER/WEST GREENWICH 11, CLASSICAL 2

Right now, there are no losers in these programs

In only their second seasons, there are plenty of teachable moments

By Eric Rueb
Journal Sports Writer

PROVIDENCE — The Classical player burst past his defender, spun and fired a hard low shot that banged off the left post. For a team that was facing a big deficit and was desperate for scoring chances in the fourth quarter, this was what it needed. One problem. “Did he just shoot on our goal?” a teammate on the sideline asked. “Oh man, he’s never going to hear the end of this.”

In a game in which Exeter/West Greenwich jumped out to six-goal lead in the first quarter en route to an 11-2 win over the Purple, the mistake was harmless. For Classical, as well as the Scarlet Knights, mistakes like that aren’t the norm but tend to pop up now and then. Both programs are in their second year of RIIL play and at this point growth means as much as goals. “I’m happy when we win, happy when the kids get a win, but it means nothing,” Classical coach Joe Murray said. “It’s about learning. They’re having run and learning the game.” “Last year, it was nothing more than a classroom full of kids,” said EWG’s Peter Hernandez, who scored five goals and had three assists on Monday. “It’s really grown into something bigger.” Last year, EWG, Classical and Johnston became the RIIL’s newest additions to the sport. In Division III, six of the current 15 teams have joined since 2015. Most players who took the field on Monday didn’t start playing until high school. They’re all learning on the fly. Classical’s goalie, John Lalli, learned the position this spring and, on Monday, Murray had a player making his debut while playing on defense. The play isn’t quite La Salle against Moses Brown, but that isn’t the point. “A lot of the game becomes based on effort and athleticism,” said Classical’s Simon Azar, who’s been playing since seventh grade and scored a goal on Monday. “Any edge you can get on stick skills is a real advantage for your team.” Mistakes are teachable moments but so are successful trips up the field. The Scarlet Knights scored six goals in the first quarter, but how they scored mattered as much as the fact they did. “Those were all transition, unsettled situations, which I wanted them to settle, but they were able to score,” EWG coach Steve Schaus said. “That’s our rule — if you have a good shot, you can take it.” “We’re in D-III, we’re just doing this for fun,” Hernandez said. “We’re hoping to go somewhere with this team and this program, but it’s a fun sport and we’re just enjoying ourselves.” No one expects the Purple or Scarlet Knights to be title contenders this year, much like you don’t expect a kindergartner to win a spelling bee. As the programs develop, the wins will come. Games like Monday only help. “We want to be competitive. We want to grow the program and have enough skills and experience and athleticism that we can compete for a Division III championship,” Schaus said. “That’s a few years away, but that’s what I want.” “It’s baby steps,” Azar

BOYS VOLLEYBALL COVENTRY 3, LA SALLE 0

Businesslike Oakers remain unbeaten

By Eric Rueb
Journal Sports Writer

PROVIDENCE — It’s methodical for the Coventry boys volleyball team, robotic even. Every now and then some emotion spills out on the court, but most of the time it’s just bump, set and spike. After last spring’s semifinal departure, the Oakers are on a mission this spring and were all business on Monday against La Salle. The Oakers came in undefeated against the one-loss Rams and left the same way with a 25-12, 25-16, 25-13 win. “Our motivation is the end game,” said Brendan McGrath, who had 15 kills. “We still take the games serious, but we’re just having fun.” “It’s all a team thing right now,” Coventry setter Troy Osterhout said. “Not everyone plays with the same energy we play with and when we do, we’re unstoppable.” The Oakers (5-0 Division I) aren’t trying to blow the roof off the building celebrating after points. They’re more content to drill balls through the floors of gyms. McGrath, a first-team All-State selection last year, doesn’t look like he’ll be any easier to block. Coventry’s Brandons — Paglia and Parton — are equally disruptive and make the decision to throw double blocks on McGrath a little harder. Add a piece like Camron Caruolo and it gives Osterhout an embarrassment of riches to get the offense going. “We brought it all out today,” Osterhout said after his 24-assist, four-kill night. “Going forward if we have that same energy, anything is possible.” The Rams were undermanned Monday, missing outside hitter Christopher Nigro and 6-foot-5 middle Jack Herberger, and didn’t do themselves many favors by piling up unforced errors. La Salle was in each set up until Coventry flipped the switch. The Oakers were up 8-7 in the first and won 25-12. They led 13-11 in the second, then won 12 of the final 17 points. It was 11-8 in the third, then outscored the Rams 14-6 for the sweep. “It was the basics that killed us — passing and serving,” La Salle coach Nik Wojciechowski said. “It wouldn’t have mattered who was here. If we pass like that, serve like that, we’re not going to win.” It would be easy to say if the Oakers keep playing like that, they’ll win a lot.

Winning big is nice, but it’s a lot of hard work. “We have stuff we can improve on,” said Jonathan Bartlett, sending a chill up the backs of the rest of the state’s coaches. “It’s mainly just on our side of the net and being prepared for what other teams are going to throw at us.” “We can keep it going,” McGrath said. “It might not look like it, but we have a ton of stuff to work on and it can only go up from here.”

NBA PLAYOFFS PACERS VS. CELTICS

C's looking to get offense in gear

By Jim Fenton
The Brockton Enterprise

BOSTON — The last time the Celtics had won a playoff game with 84 points or less, Kevin Garnett and Paul Pierce were on the roster.

It was Game 6 of an opening-round series against Al Horford and the Atlanta Hawks when the Celtics advanced with an 83-80 victory on May 10, 2012.

Nearly seven years later, the Celtics had problems at the offensive end in Game 1 of a first-round series with the Indiana Pacers, yet they managed to survive those struggles on Sunday afternoon.

Despite shooting only 36 percent and turning the ball over 20 times, the Celtics got past the Pacers, 84-74, on the strength a strong second-half performance.

The Celtics failed to reach 100 points in only nine of their 82 games during the regular season and lost every time, but they ended that streak to take a 1-0 lead over the Pacers in a series that resumes on Wednesday night at the TD Garden.

Including the regular season and the playoffs, the Celtics had not won any game in which they were held to 84 points or less since Nov. 25, 2015 when they edged the Philadelphia 76ers, 84-80.

The NBA had not had a winning team in the playoffs score 84 points or less since the Hawks defeated the Washington Wizards, 82-81, on May 13, 2015.

After averaging 112.4 points in the regular season, the Celtics were far from sharp on offense, except for a stretch in the third quarter when they managed to take control against the Pacers.

Fixing what ailed them at the offensive end in the series opener will be a top priority as the Celtics seek a second straight win over Indiana.

"It's tough," said coach Brad Stevens, who gave his team the day off on Monday. "Those guys are tough and physical and for us to say we were just tight and we missed shots would not be fair to them.

"They were tremendous defensively and they did some things a little differently that they had (during the regular season) in a lot of ways. This was like Game 3 because we had played each other a couple of times in recent weeks. We have to make sure we get a lot better to get the looks we want."

The Pacers, who have struggled offensively since leading scorer Victor Oladipo's season ended Jan. 23, led the NBA in fewest points allowed (104.7) and were sixth in opposing field-goal percentage (45).

They have size inside with Thaddeus Young, Myles Turner and Domantas Sabonis, and those three bothered the Celtics. Young was in foul trouble in the second quarter, which hurt the Pacers.

The Celtics, who were third in the regular season with the fewest number of turnovers (12.4 per game), had 10 by halftime and finished with 20. They scored 20 or fewer points in three of the four quarters and were limited to 24 points in the final 16 minutes after moving in front.

"We missed some open looks in the first half," said Stevens, "but there were also times where we didn't own our space and they were physical with us."

The Celtics had failed to score 90 points only once all season, doing so in a 98-86 loss to Utah Jazz on Nov. 17. They managed only 38 first-half points against the Pacers, shooting just 33 percent.

"We know offensively that probably was the worst half that we played all season," said Kyrie Irving.

Added Horford: "84-74, that's old school right there."

The Celtics found a way to overcome those offensive problems to start the playoffs with a win in their first post-season game since being held to 79 points by the Cleveland Cavaliers last May.

"It was hard, it wasn't pretty, things went against us," said Stevens. "You've got to stay together and you grind it out. There will be games where we make a lot of shots and it will make us look better than we played.

"(Sunday), we played a little better than we looked."

NHL PLAYOFFS HURRICANES 5, CAPITALS 0

Carolina dominates in rare home win

By Joedy McCreary
The Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — Rookie forward Warren Foegele had two goals and an assist, Petr Mrazek earned his fourth career postseason shutout and the Carolina Hurricanes won their first home playoff game in a decade, routing the Washington Capitals, 5-0, on Monday night.

Dougie Hamilton also scored two goals, Brock McGinn had a late goal and an assist and Jacob Slavin had two assists as the rapid-fire Hurricanes outshot Washington, 45-18, to cut the defending Stanley Cup champions' lead to 2-1 in the best-of-seven series.

Playing with just 10 forwards after losing two to injuries in the first period, Carolina effectively rolled with three lines the rest of the way and fed off an amped-up crowd releasing 10 years of pent-up frustration with every hit.

Mrazek finished with 18 saves in his fifth career playoff victory — the last four have been shutouts.

Braden Holtby stopped 40 shots for Washington, which had its six-game postseason winning streak snapped. The Capitals were shut out in the playoffs for the first time since 2017.

They won all four regular-season meetings with their longtime division rivals — first in the old Southeast, now in the Metropolitan — before winning the first two games of this series on home ice.

The first postseason game in Raleigh since 2009 — when Carolina was swept by Pittsburgh in the Eastern Conference final — was a physical, borderline violent affair, headlined by Alex Ovechkin's first career playoff fight, one that sent Hurricanes rookie Andrei Svechnikov's head crashing onto the ice and knocked him out of the game.

Svechnikov was one of two Carolina forwards to suffer upper-body injuries in the first 10 minutes — physical winger Micheal Ferland was hurt about two minutes earlier — and that left the Hurricanes' bench short for the final 2½ periods.

There was nothing at all wrong with Foegele, who had his team's first two-goal postseason game since Eric Staal in Game 4 against Boston in the second round in 2009.

Around the boards

Foegele's only other two-goal game in the NHL came in the third game of the regular season, an 8-5 win over the New York Rangers on Oct. 7. ... The Capitals had just one shot on goal in the second period. ... This was Carolina's first postseason victory since May 14, 2009, when Scott Walker scored in overtime of Game 7 against Boston. ... Carolina will look to even the series at two games apiece in Game 4 on Thursday night in Raleigh.

BRUINS

Matthews put Toronto back in front just 12 seconds after David Backes was whistled for high-sticking on Kasperii Kapanen, taking a feed from Johnsson and burying his first beyond an outstretched Rask to send the crowd into a frenzy at 10:12.

Mitch Marner, who scored twice in Game 1 but was held in check along with most of his teammates on Saturday, made the initial play to Johnsson off the offensive zone draw.

Criticized for his play in the Bruins' seven-game victory over the Maple Leafs' in last spring's first round, the 21-year-old Matthews was immediately serenaded by chants of "Aus-ton! Matth-ews!" by the crowd.

Promoted to the first power-play unit because of Kadri's suspension, Johnsson made it 3-1 with his first career playoff goal with 2:48 left in the period when he roofed a backhand over Rask after a nice feed from Tavares as Toronto connected for a second time on the man-advantage after going 0-for-4 in the first two games.

Matthews, who had just two points against the Bruins in the 2018 postseason, picked up the second assist to match his total from last year.

Boston responded on a power play of its own with 37.3 seconds left in the period when Coyle collected a puck off the end boards to score his second of the series.

The Bruins got a power play five minutes into the third when Maple Leafs defenseman Nikita Zaitsev fired the puck over the glass for a delay-of-game penalty, but Toronto's penalty-kill held firm against a man-advantage that has connected in every game this series.

After Matthews and Johnsson had chances to make it 4-2, Andersen made a diving stop with the knob of his stick on Krejci to keep his team ahead.

Boston kept up the pressure with Rask on the bench for an extra attacker, but Toronto held on despite some tense moments late — including two key blocks from Marner.

Kadri traveled to New York for an in-person hearing, meaning the NHL had the option to suspend him for more than five games. The 28-year-old, who has been suspended five times since 2013, will miss anywhere from three to five games, but the ban won't stretch into the second round of these playoffs or next season.

William Nylander slid over from the wing to take Kadri's place on Toronto's third line behind between Patrick Marleau and Connor Brown.

DeBrusk suited up after leaving Game 2 following the hit by Kadri, while Krug was also good to go despite leaving Saturday after taking a huge hit from Maple Leafs defenseman Jake Muzzin.

Around the boards

Game 5 is set for Friday in Boston. Game 6, if necessary, would be back in Toronto on Sunday. ... Bruins defenseman Connor Clifton sat out with an undisclosed injury, while winger Marcus Johansson missed a second consecutive game with an illness.

Up next

Game 4 is Wednesday night in Toronto.

NBA PLAYOFFS 76ERS 145, NETS 123

Simmons leads Philly in Game 2 blowout

The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Ben Simmons got an earful from the Philly crowd.

With the same 76ers fans Simmons put on blast for booing in the playoff opener now going wild in Game 2, Simmons cupped a hand to his right ear just like Allen Iverson's signature move to spur the cheers even louder.

And he did it with Iverson rooting on the Sixers from courtside.

Simmons had 18 points, 12 assists and 10 rebounds and the Philadelphia 76ers had an answer for the pesky Brooklyn Nets in a 145-123 win to even their Eastern Conference playoff series on Monday night.

Simmons had a disastrous Game 1, on the court (nine points) and from a PR perspective after he criticized fans for booing during a game the Sixers were never really in. He backtracked the next day at practice and never gave another 20,591 fans a chance to do anything but roar in approval in Game 2. Simmons flashed the All-Star form that helped lead the Sixers to 51 wins, and was aggressive from tipoff. He used his size and speed to attack the lane and scored 16 points in the half — and then put the game away in the third.

The Sixers busted the game open with a 14-0 run to start the second half and then stretched the lead to 20 on a Simmons steal and fastbreak basket. With a packed house standing, Simmons got a massive ovation when he cupped his hand to his right ear just like Iverson did in his prime.

The Nets collapsed in the second half, outplayed and overmatched much as expected by pundits and bookmakers (they were 7.5-point Game 2 underdogs).

Spencer Dinwiddie led the Nets with 19 points and D'Angelo Russell had 16.

pulling for Woods because, well, they've never before pulled for Woods to win a Masters. Jordan Spieth, Rory McIlroy, Justin Thomas or some other 20-something maybe, but never Woods.

Back in 2005 when Woods famously chipped in from behind the 16th green and outdueled Chris DiMarco in a playoff, most of today's teenagers or early-20s golf addicts weren't born or paying attention. That's one of many reasons why Sunday's Tiger victory at Augusta was so significant, so vital for the game of golf.

"I was 10 when Tiger last won the Masters and I didn't watch it," Lobel said. "But Tiger transcends the sport. You could see it on Twitter and Instagram. Whether it was Trump, Obama, Serena Williams, everyone and everyone backed Tiger."

As soon as Woods walked off the 18th green and embraced his son, mother, daughter and girl friend, one of the greatest comeback stories in sports was complete. Woods couldn't play in the Masters in 2014, '16 and '17 because of chronic back woes that threatened to sideline him forever. After attending the Champions Dinner at Augusta National in 2017 and needing a nerve blocker to ease the pain shooting down his legs, Woods underwent a spinal fusion surgery a few weeks later that he viewed as a last-chance just to live pain-free.

The road back wasn't pretty. A month after the surgery Woods was found near his Jupiter, Fla., mansion passed out behind the wheel of his Mercedes with a myriad of pain killers in his blood. But he didn't quit. He gradually grew stronger, returned to the PGA Tour in early 2018 and now has won his 15th major championship.

"I can't believe we're witnessing this. I should be filming this," said Ricky Fowler, one of several current stars Woods trains with near his Florida home. "It's just cool to see him come back, fall in love with the game again, be healthy and be able to be out here and compete with us."

We can debate whether Woods' comeback is the greatest in sports history, or even in golf. Don't forget that Ben Hogan nearly lost his life when he was left near death after a car crash in 1949. The 38-year-old shockingly returned to win the U.S. Open 16 months later at Merion and went on to win six of his nine career majors after the accident. That's a comeback.

What is not debatable is Woods' appeal and impact on his sport. Consider the reaction of his fellow competitors, young stars like Spieth and Fowler who grew up idolizing Woods and now face the daunting task of beating him.

"Incredible," said Brooks Koepka, 28, one of today's young guns. "To be able to come back out here and have the Tiger of old back — as a fan, I love it. I think it's awesome. I'm glad he's back. It's probably one of the coolest things to be a part of. Even though you finished (in) second place, you're a little bummed out, but I wouldn't want it any other way. You want to play against the best to ever play. You want to go toe to toe with them, and I can leave saying I gave it my all. He's just good, man. I don't know what to say."

Just a few years ago, some players in Koepka's generation looked at a fallen Tiger and wondered what it would be like to compete against him.

"The hell they would," shot back David Duval, one of the players Woods rolled over in the 2000s.

Anyone who didn't see this coming wasn't paying attention. In three of the most recent big golf events, Woods finished second in the PGA Championship last August, won the Tour Championship in September, and shot 6-under at the Players Championship in March to finish 30th. When he arrived at Augusta last week, Woods was healthy but hardly the favorite. However, he remained a favorite in the eyes of the greatest golfer of all time. Jack Nicklaus said on Sunday that if Woods could get healthy, his record of 18 major championships would be in jeopardy.

Up next is the PGA Championship in May at Bethpage on Long Island. The U.S. Open follows in June at Pebble Beach. Will anyone dare bet against Tiger?

"I felt for a long time he was going to win again," Nicklaus said. "You know, the next two majors are at Bethpage, where he's won (the 2002 U.S. Open), and Pebble Beach, where he's won [2000 U.S. Open]. So he's got me shaking in my boots, guys."

San Francisco eyes charge to drive its famed Lombard Street

SAN FRANCISCO — Thousands of tourists could soon have to pay as much as $10 to drive down world-famous Lombard Street in San Francisco.

City and state officials on Monday announced a bill that would give San Francisco the authority to establish a toll and reservation system for the street that winds down a steep hill, in an effort to reduce crowds and traffic congestion.

“We must implement a system that enables both residents and visitors to enjoy the ‘Crookedest Street in the World,’” said Assemblyman Phil Ting, a San Francisco Democrat who authored the legislation.

Residents say the scenic thoroughfare feels more like an overcrowded amusement park than a neighborhood street. They have been calling for years for officials to address the traffic jams, trash and trespassing by visitors.

In the summer months, an estimated 6,000 people a day visit the 600-foot-long (183-meter) street, creating lines of cars that stretch for blocks, clogging the Russian Hill neighborhood.

“The cars really impact the neighborhood because they line up, they back up, they are sitting idling,” said Greg Brundage, president of the Lombard Hill Improvement Association.

San Francisco transportation officials have proposed requiring visitors to make a reservation online and pay $5 for each vehicle. Another plan calls for online reservations and a $10 charge on weekends and holidays.

The city needs state approval to charge people to use a public road but it would be up to city officials to determine how and what to charge and how to use the funds. The new toll system is not expected to be in place before 2020, officials said.

Supervisor Catherine Stefani said the fee would help sustain the reservations system and help pay for more traffic control officers, more police patrols in the area and tourism ambassadors who would make sure visitors have a good experience.

“It’s a pilot program but it’s something we must try to address the traffic congestion,” Stefani said.

Vida Bhatt, a tourist from Melbourne, Australia, said she and her family drove down the crooked street, parked their car, then decided to go back and explore the thoroughfare on

Police: Wisconsin teen gunned down grandparents

A 17-year-old told investigators that he fatally shot his grandparents and was planning to cause harm at his eastern Wisconsin high school, police said Monday.

Police officers responding to a 911 call for assistance found the bodies of 74-year-old Dennis Kraus and 73-year-old Letha Kraus at their home in Grand Chute about 11:30 a.m. Sunday, Officer Travis Waas said. He declined to release details of the call.

Police arrested their grandson, Alexander M. Kraus at the couple’s home, Waas said. Kraus, who lives in nearby Neenah, admitted that he shot the couple, Waas said. Waus declined to comment on the nature of Kraus’ plans at his school or the severity of the threat. Police also released no information on why the couple was shot.

Video: Officers shoot man after telling him to drop gun

Police video released Monday shows an officer in Charlotte, North Carolina, fatally shooting a man who was armed but didn’t point his weapon at authorities.

The body camera footage shows two officers approaching 27-year-old Danquirs Napoleon Franklin outside a Burger King on March 25 after witnesses called 911 to report a man with a gun acting in a threatening manner.

The police video shows officers repeatedly yelling for Franklin, who is black, to put his gun down. He’s seen squatting by the open door of a car, facing someone in the passenger seat.

Jurors deliberate on man who dropped daughter off bridge

A Florida man who threw his 5-year-old daughter off a Tampa Bay area bridge four years ago knew what he was doing was wrong and should be found guilty of first-degree murder, a prosecutor told jurors Monday during closing arguments of his trial.

But John Jonchuck’s defense attorney told jurors that although her client dropped his daughter, Phoebe, 62 feet into Tampa Bay, he was insane and didn’t know what he was doing.

“We know he had an overwhelming sense of fear,” assistant public defender Jessica Manuele said. “He felt that somebody was after him and Phoebe.”

California police fatally shoot man wielding ‘large stick’

Officials say a Northern California police officer shot and killed a man who was threatening to strike officers with a large stick.

Red Bluff Police Chief Kyle Sanders said in a statement that after officers encountered the man on a street he repeatedly refused to obey orders to drop the stick and walked away from them during the confrontation shortly after midnight Sunday. Police did not describe details about the stick.

Officers first used a stun gun and a bean bag shot at the man to try to get him to comply but those efforts didn’t work, Sanders said.

Cortez calls social media a ‘public health risk’

By Hamza Shaban
The Washington Post

Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, whose mastery of social media has helped drive the national conversation and shed light on the inner workings of congressional power, has given up on the most popular social network in the world.

In an interview Sunday with the Yahoo News podcast “Skullduggery,” the New York Democrat said she suspended her personal Facebook account and was scaling back on all social media, which she described as a “public health risk” because it can lead to “increased isolation, depression, anxiety, addiction, escapism.”

Ocasio-Cortez, 29, who burst onto the national stage after defeating a high-ranking incumbent, said her departure from Facebook was a “big deal” because the platform was crucial to her campaign. She still has accounts on the site, she said, and according to the company’s ad library, her Facebook account has dozens of active advertisements sponsored by Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez for Congress. Among the Facebook ads are calls to support her signature Green New Deal, and fundraising pleas to support progressive legislation and to counteract a super PAC aligned against her.

“The congresswoman’s words speak for themselves,” said Corbin Trent, a spokesman for Ocasio-Cortez.

Ocasio-Cortez joins other prominent users who have given up on the social network, including WhatsApp co-founder Brian Acton, who sold his company to Facebook in 2014, and Apple co-founder Steve Wozniak. Both technologists parted ways with the social network amid a user boycott and as the company faced a congressional inquiry over the Cambridge Analytica controversy, when it was revealed that the political firm had improperly obtained personal information from millions of Facebook users.

Ocasio-Cortez’s disengagement from Facebook also tracks broad trends in social media use among young people.

The world reacted with shock, horror and prayers to the massive fire Monday at the Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris, united in grief and in solidarity with the people of France.

As the flames tore through the 12th-century cathedral, Spain's prime minister offered France the help of his country in the recovery.

The fire is a "catastrophe for France, for Spain and for Europe," Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez tweeted, adding that the flames are destroying "850 years of history, architecture, painting and sculpture."

U.S. President Donald Trump, speaking at the start of an appearance in Minnesota, spoke of the "terrible, terrible fire" that was destroying "one of the great treasures of the world."

"It's a part of our growing up, it's a part of our culture, it's a part of our lives," Trump said of the landmark.

The Notre Dame Cathedral, situated on an island in the Seine River in the heart of Paris, is one of the most visited tourist destinations in the world, drawing some 13 million people each year. The fire's emotional impact was widely felt. People from many parts of the world described in Facebook posts how they cried when they heard about the fire.

Former U.S. President Barack Obama posted an old photo of himself, his wife and their two daughters lighting candles in the cathedral.

"Notre Dame is one of the world's great treasures, and we're thinking of the people of France in your time of grief," Obama said on Twitter.

The Vatican said Pope Francis "has seen with shock and sadness the news of the terrible fire that has devastated the Cathedral of Notre Dame, symbol of Christianity in France and in the world."

Cardinal Timothy Dolan, the archbishop of New York, prayed at St.

Patrick's Cathedral in Manhattan for intercession.

"God preserve this splendid house of prayer, and protect those battling the blaze," Dolan said in a statement.

U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres tweeted that he's "horried," calling the cathedral "a unique example of world heritage."

In Russia, the Russian Orthodox Church's secretary for inter-Christian relations Hieromonk Stefan called the fire "a tragedy for the entire Christian world and for all who appreciate the cultural significance of this temple," the state news agency RIA-Novosti reported:

On Twitter, Trump suggested using planes to drop water on the flames. France's Civil Security agency said that wasn't feasible.

"All means are being used, except for water-bombing aircrafts which, if used, could lead to the collapse of the entire structure of the cathedral," the agency tweeted.

CAIRO Sudan's protesters voice optimism after talks with army

Sudanese protesters on Monday welcomed the "positive steps" taken by the ruling military council, which held talks with opposition leaders over the weekend and released some political prisoners.

The praise came despite a brief incident earlier Monday in which activists said soldiers attempted to disperse the ongoing protest sit-in outside the military headquarters in the capital, Khartoum, but eventually backed off.

Last week, Sudan's military ousted longtime President Omar al-Bashir following four months of street protests against his rule, then appointed a military council that it says will rule for two years or less while elections are organized. Demonstrators fear that the army, dominated by al-Bashir appointees, will cling to power or select one of its own to succeed him.

BENGHAZI, LIBYA UN says 146 killed in Libya as Italy calls for cease-fire

At least 146 people have been killed since a Libyan military commander launched an offensive on the capital earlier this month, the U.N. said Monday, as Italy called for an immediate cease-fire and the withdrawal of his forces.

The World Health Organization said 614 others have been wounded since the Field Marshal Khalifa Hifter's self-styled Libyan National Army launched its offensive on April 5. It did not specify whether those killed and wounded were civilians or fighters.

The fighting pits the LNA against rival militias loosely affiliated with a weak U.N.-backed government based in the capital, Tripoli.

CARACAS, VENEZUELA Canada hits Venezuelan government with sanctions

Canada on Monday imposed more sanctions on the government of Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro, who it blames for the country's deteriorating political and economic situation.

Foreign Minister Chrystia Freeland announced sanctions against 43 high-ranking Venezuelan officials, including regional governors, and said they were implicated in the undermining of democratic institutions.

Canada had already sanctioned 70 other people linked to Maduro's government.

MEXICO CITY Clandestine burial sites found as violence surges in Mexico

Mexican officials confirmed the discovery of up to 30 bodies in clandestine burial sites over the same weekend that they said some Red Cross ambulances will get armed escorts for the most risky calls.

On Saturday, the Sonora state prosecutor's office said in a statement it had sent forensics experts into the field to accompany a volunteer search group that helped discover what was estimated to be 27 sets of human remains.

Beyond Westeros

HBO looks at future without ‘Game of Thrones,’ maybe back to a prequel

By Lynn Elber
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — When the last drop — or gallon — of blood is shed and an exultant victor has ascended to the Iron Throne, viewers may be split over how HBO’s fantasy saga ended but they’ll be joined in deprivation.

“What do you do without ‘Game of Thrones?’” will be the lament heard after the May 19 finale, said media industry analyst Larry Gerbrandt. The question is even more critical to the pay-cable channel, which soared on dragon’s wings with its hugely popular, eight-season adaptation of George R.R. Martin’s novels.

Keeping subscribers on board means more than another hit, even one as globally dazzling as “Game of Thrones” proved to be. But it’s where HBO can start to protect its brand and position, observers say, an effort both demanded and compounded by an increasingly congested small-screen landscape and the expectations of the channel’s corporate owner since 2016, AT&T.

“I think they need a prestige show on this level to remain HBO,” Bill Carter, a media analyst for CNN and former reporter for The New York Times. But “more than ever, it’s really hard to find a hit show and to break through in this marketplace.”

Sunday’s season premiere underscored the point, with “Game of Thrones” drawing a series-high record of 17.4 million viewers on TV and streaming. It set a streaming record for HBO and reinforced its standing as one of television’s most popular shows.

The channel is well into the hunt for a worthy successor, with one possibility an untitled prequel to “Game of Thrones” created by Martin and Jane Goldman and starring Naomi Watts. Set to begin shooting a pilot in June, it’s among several potential “Thrones” spinoffs being weighed, with discussions at HBO about “how many is too many,” said programming chief Casey Bloys.

“We have high hopes” for the pilot, he said. “But I want to be clear, nobody is going into this thinking that we’re going to do a prequel and all of a sudden everybody who automatically watched ‘Game of Thrones’ is going to watch this. ... It’ll have a different feel and different rhythm. We’re not trying to do the same show again.”

That begs the question of what more HBO has to offer, he said. During a period in which “Game of Thrones” was off the air for scheduling reasons, series including “Westworld,” “Sharp Objects” and “Barry” proved strong draws, Bloys said.

“I’m not going to argue that we won’t miss ‘Game of Thrones.’ It’s been a fantastic show for us, but life does go on,” he said. He points to a deep bench of returnees, including Nicole Kidman and Reese Witherspoon’s “Big Little Lies,” and newcomers including the graphic novel-based “Watchmen” from “Lost” producer Damon Lindelof. One marquee series that’s also in its final season: the much-admired comedy “Veep,” with Julia Louis-Dreyfus.

HBO, which launched in 1972 and whose cachet has long justified the boastful slogan, “It’s not TV. It’s HBO,” has reached this crossroads before. At the turn of the century, pop-culture sensations “The Sopranos” and “Sex and the City” boosted the channel’s visibility and subscribers and made it a serious player for prestige awards — including cable’s first-ever Emmys for best drama and comedy series. After the shows wrapped, the channel moved nimbly on with audience-pleasers including “Six Feet Under” and “True Blood.”

But that was then, and this is the time of streaming — or, in shorthand, Netflix, along with a growing host of others including Amazon and Hulu — and a shoulder-bumping rush for stars and showmakers to churn out more and more fare for outlets already awash in programming.

HBO, no longer a singular alternative to staid broadcast networks, also got new corporate ownership when AT&T bought its parent company, Time Warner. HBO recently saw the exit of its chief executive, Richard Plepler, who had been with the channel for nearly 30 years and guided it to “Game of Thrones” glory.

With AT&T’s resources, HBO has stepped up production and will see a 50% increase in the number of original program hours this year, Bloys said, arguing that volume doesn’t preclude high quality: “There’s nothing in 2019 that we’re putting on the air because we’re trying to hit an hour count. ... We haven’t lowered any of our standards to reach a certain level of programming” and there is no pressure to do otherwise from WarnerMedia CEO John Stankey, he said.

UK proposes banning social media ‘likes’ for children

The Associated Press

LONDON — Britain’s privacy regulator wants to stop kids from being able to “like” posts on Facebook and other social media sites as part of tough new rules it’s proposing to protect children’s online privacy.

Under the draft rules, which were released for consultation on Monday, tech companies would not be allowed to use “nudge techniques” that encourage children to keep using a site.

The Information Commissioner’s Office said examples of “reward loops” that keep people using a site so that more of their personal data can be harvested include “likes” on Facebook and Instagram or “streaks” on Snapchat. A Snapchat streak involves two friends sending each other direct “snaps” on consecutive days.

The code of practice includes 16 standards that must be met by apps, connected toys, social media sites, search engines, news or educational websites and streaming or other online services. It applies to companies that offer services in the U.K., even if they are based outside the country.

The code also calls for “high privacy” settings to be on by default and “robust age-verification mechanisms.” Only the minimum amount of data should be collected and location tracking should be disabled by default.

Violators face punishment including, in serious cases, fines worth 4 percent of a company’s global revenue, which for the Silicon Valley tech giants would equal billions of dollars.

“This is the connected generation. The internet and all its wonders are hardwired into their everyday lives,” Information Commissioner Elizabeth Denham said in a statement. “We shouldn’t have to prevent our children from being able to use it, but we must demand that they are protected when they do. This code does that.”

Regulators worldwide are stepping up oversight of internet companies amid growing concern about privacy breaches and other online harm. The European Union introduced sweeping new privacy rules last year while in the U.S., momentum is building for a national privacy law.

How the alt-right corrupts the Constitution

By John E. Finn
Wesleyan University

About 10 years ago, I spent a sabbatical on the Maine coast writing a book about the Constitution. One afternoon, an eager reference librarian who knew about my interests invited me to a talk at the library. The featured speaker was a woman who proudly called herself a “Constitutional Patriot.” The speaker was self-educated and her message was simple: Liberal elites — judges, politicians and academics — had perverted the meaning of the “True Constitution.”

Getting the Constitution “right,” in her view and in the view of a great many far-right conservative groups and organizations, all of them constitutional patriots of a sort, means understanding the Constitution as the Founders understood it. Getting the Constitution “right” thus means returning the Constitution to its original meaning. It also means that the Constitution, as they read it, advances a particular and deeply conservative worldview, where “We the People” includes only those citizens who would have qualified for citizenship at the founding (which is to say, whites), a strong commitment to states’ rights and extensive — if not absolute — protections for freedom of speech and guns. It is a view that many in the alt-right share.

Christian, conservative and white

Most observers think the alt-right are conservative extremists, defined chiefly by their loud and proud commitment to white racial superiority and privilege. But there’s much more to the alt-right. I’m a constitutional scholar and in my latest book, “Fracturing the Founding: How the Alt-Right Corrupts the Constitution,” I show how the alt-right and a wide variety of extremist organizations advance a comprehensive — if not entirely comprehensible — vision of the American Constitution. What I call the Alt-constitution is an odd mix of the forgotten, the rejected, the racist and the bizarre. It begins with the claim that the Constitution was not only divinely inspired, it is also Christian, conservative and white. The Alt-constitution — in sharp distinction from the real Constitution — tolerates no restrictions on speech, guns or private property, does not concede that federal laws trump state and local law — although the supremacy clause of Article 6 of the Constitution clearly indicates otherwise — and incorporates the principle of separate but equal. For the far right, the meaning of every provision in the Constitution is plain or discerned easily by appealing to what the Founders intended. Or failing that, to Holy Scripture.

Guns and speech

Extreme right-wing thinking about the Constitution is not limited to radical readings of just a few isolated amendments. Rather, it extends to nearly every part of the document. But you can get a good feel for the Alt-constitution by focusing upon just a few provisions, such as the First, Second and 14th amendments — and on the alt-right subgroups that focus on them. The far right’s reading of the First and Second amendments — which govern free speech and the right to bear arms, respectively — starts from a simple premise: Both amendments are literal and absolute. The far right holds that the First Amendment allows them to say anything, anytime, anywhere, to anyone, without consequence or reproach by government or even by other citizens who disagree or take offense at their speech. Similarly, the alt-right gun advocates hold that the Second Amendment protects their God-given right to own a weapon — any weapon — and that governmental efforts to deny, restrict or even to register their weapons must be unconstitutional. They think the Second Amendment trumps every other provision in the Constitution. In sharp contrast, even the Supreme Court’s originalists, who believe that the Constitution’s meaning should be the one it had when it became law, have rejected this absolutism. In both DC v. Heller, a 2008 ruling that concluded that the Second Amendment does protect an individual right to own certain kinds of weapons, and McDonald v. City of Chicago, which made that right applicable to state governments, the court conceded that the Second Amendment does not, as conservative icon Justice Antonin Scalia wrote, protect a “right to keep and carry any weapon whatsoever in any manner whatsoever and for whatever purpose.” The Sheriff’s Brigade of Pennsylvania — “a law abiding grassroots organization comprised of patriotic, freedom loving Americans” and definitely not “to be construed as being a militia group, a para-military group” — disagrees. On their website, they say that “Justice Scalia is wrong ... We all have a God given, individual right to bear arms, any arms!”

Citizenship and due process

The absolutism of the Alt-constitutionalist’s perceptions of the First and Second amendments has little to do with the real Constitution. But at least it is easy to grasp. The Alt-14th amendment, in contrast, is a muddle. Briefly, the 14th Amendment is the cornerstone of the three Reconstruction Amendments passed after the Civil War. It overruled the infamous Dred Scott case by making African Americans — and every person born in the United States — a citizen. The amendment also guarantees due process of law and equal protection of the laws to every person in the jurisdiction of the United States. And as interpreted by the Supreme Court, the 14th Amendment’s due process clause makes most of the provisions of the Bill of Rights applicable to state governments. But in some right-wing circles, the 14th Amendment is illegitimate, as are many of the later amendments not drafted by the Founders. Not only is the 14th Amendment unconstitutional, it is also at the heart of a nefarious plot to deprive white citizens of their constitutional rights. For some in these circles, the 14th Amendment also fundamentally degrades what it means to be a citizen. Sovereign Citizens, for example, see in the 14th Amendment a conspiracy to deprive them of their inalienable rights and to swap out their “sovereign” citizenship with an inferior “federal” or “contract” citizenship. As sovereign citizens, they believe they are not subject to federal laws that they think violate the original meaning of the Constitution.

Constitution boot camps

The most important thing any constitution does is to determine our identity — to tell us who “We the People” are and what we believe. This understanding of the role of a constitution leads directly to why the radical right believes its version of the constitution is so important: They use the Alt-constitution as a tool in their ongoing struggle to remake America in their image. Getting the Constitution “right” thus includes a concerted effort to teach citizens that the Constitution embraces the extreme right’s conservative world view. Just as Evangelicals parse “The Word” in Bible clubs, constitutional patriots form study groups and give lectures at local libraries and other civic places. They produce and purchase instructional materials to teach each other and their children fundamental constitutional truths — true or not. There are constitution classes, complete with approved texts — W. Cleon Skousen’s “The Five Thousand Year Leap” is a favorite. There are online courses: David Barton’s Constitution ALIVE! “covers the key principles that make the U.S. Constitution the most remarkable political document of all time.” And there are even constitution “boot camps.” I believe that what goes on in these courses is less education than evangelizing. In the radical right, constitution worship is an article of faith. As David Barton proclaims in his “Constitution Alive!” course, the Constitution “is the most remarkable political document of all time.” Or as Ronald Mann wrote in his introduction to Skousen’s “The Five Thousand Year Leap,” the choice for the Founders at Philadelphia was between “Christ or chaos.” Yet constitution worship does not encourage (or even tolerate) critical thinking about the Founders or their work. Nor does it make room for any inquiry into where they might have got things wrong or where or how the Constitution may need fixing. I believe the Alt-constitution threatens the values, norms and principles that make up our constitutional tradition. The threat is not confined to the fringe elements of conservative politics. The Alt-constitution’s principles have shown up in the mainstream right’s renewed interest in states’ rights, sometimes expressed in ideas like nullification — the proposition that states can disregard federal laws — or even secede from the Union.

Manning goes deep

Former QB great looks at NFL’s storied history

By Barry Wilner
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Just as he had the true touch when he threw passes, set records and won two Super Bowls, Peyton Manning has the right approach when looking at some of the NFL’s greatest moments.

ESPN, NFL Films and the league itself clearly felt that way.

Manning, a lock for the Pro Football Hall of Fame when he becomes eligible in 2021, is hosting and serving as an executive producer for “Peyton’s Places,” a five-part, 30-episode series celebrating the NFL’s 100th season. The show debuts on ESPN+ in July, with ESPN and ABC airing special compilations.

For the quarterback, it was a labor of love, a journey into pro football’s past that was educational, humorous and heartfelt.

“NFL Films has been great throughout this and they approached me about doing it to tell the story of the past 100 years,” Manning says. “They certainly had a template and blueprint they wanted to tell, and we had certain people we wanted to talk to and visit and have conversations about how football got started.”

So Manning dived all the way back to Ralph Hay’s Hupmobile showroom in Canton, Ohio. He spent time with members of the undefeated 1972 Dolphins; rewatched Super Bowl 3 with Joe Namath; discussed the Immaculate Reception with Steelers and Raiders to get the Pittsburgh and Oakland viewpoints; and discovered intriguing connections to the NFL for Richard Nixon, Jay Leno and Elvis.

“We got to go down memory lane,” Manning says. “I have always loved the history of the game and I have learned a lot during this journey, and spent some time with some of my favorite players and contemporaries of my dad (former Saints star quarterback Archie Manning) and guys he looked up to.

“NFL Films has all this great archives of (Bears founder) George Halas talking about being in Ralph Hay’s Hupmobile showroom, (Giants owner) Wellington Mara talking about how Vince Lombardi wanted him to take Polaroids and throw them down to the field when Vince was coaching with the Giants. To maybe re-enact it or kind of tell that story, it’s kind of why I signed up for it.”

Along the way, Manning channeled his inner comedian, as displayed in TV commercials and as host of “Saturday Night Live.”

A big fan of Elvis Presley, Manning visited Graceland and “may or may not” have dressed up in an Elvis costume. He did discover that Presley staged impromptu games at local parks and was such a die-hard NFL fan he had three television sets on hand so he could watch as much football as possible.

“He got the idea from Lyndon Baines Johnson, who had three TVs so he could watch the news and political news coverage,” Manning explains.

Manning and Cris Carter also tried to replicate a stunt the New York Giants performed at the O’Keeffe Radiator Building in Manhattan — now the American Radiator Building. In 1926, the Giants’ Lynn Bomar threw a ball to the ground from 324 feet up on the 23-story building, and Hinkley Haines caught it.

“Back in the ‘20s, the forward pass was like a circus act,” Manning says. “When you were in the red zone and threw a pass into the end zone and it was incomplete, the other team got the ball; that was news to me. Clearly, teams didn’t want to throw it.

“But to get some buzz and interest

SPORTS REPORT

RALEIGH, N.C.
Study: Minority hiring in MLB ranks similar to previous year

A diversity report released Monday on Major League Baseball finds the sport remaining largely on the same footing from the previous year in racial and gender hiring practices, with the biggest area of concern coming in the front offices of league teams.

The annual report card from The Institute for Diversity and Ethics in Sport (TIDES) at Central Florida found slight fluctuations in scores for racial and gender hiring. The grade for racial hiring was an A-minus with 89 points, up a point from a year earlier, while the grade for gender hiring dropped one point to a 70 for a C.

The overall score was unchanged at 79, a B-minus.

BALTIMORE
Historic section of Pimlico not safe for Preakness seating

Nearly 6,700 grandstand seats at Baltimore’s Pimlico Race Course are not safe, an engineering firm has determined, meaning roughly 18 percent of the historic track’s seating capacity will be cordoned-off when it hosts one of America’s premier horse races next month.

Some city lawmakers assert that the looming closure of the northern grandstand adjacent to the clubhouse — the oldest section of seating with a capacity of 6,670 — illustrates how the Canada-based development company that owns and operates the track has systematically routed renovation cash away from the host of the Preakness Stakes. The storied race is the second-leg of the Triple Crown.

“This announcement underscores the core issue of renovation funding being intentionally steered away from Pimlico to help manufacture a crisis,” said state Sen. Bill Ferguson, a Baltimore Democrat.

Pimlico owner The Stronach Group says its hands are tied: An engineering firm has determined that the northern grandstand with those 6,670 seats can’t sustain that level of load bearing weight any longer.

Garage catches fire at Texas home of boxer George Foreman

Authorities say an accidental fire in a garage at the Texas home of former heavyweight boxing champion George Foreman damaged the garage and several vehicles, but caused no injuries.

A spokeswoman for the Harris County Fire Marshal’s Office, Rachel Moreno, says the Sunday night blaze didn’t spread beyond the garage. She says smoke and water damaged some of the approximately 40 vehicles inside. Moreno said the fire started on a golf cart.

Foreman later tweeted, “Don’t worry all is well.” He thanked firefighters who responded to the home in Huffman, an unincorporated community in the Houston area.

The fire comes just more than a month after Foreman’s daughter, Freeda Foreman, was found dead in her home in suburban Houston.

Kanter making most of second chance with Blazers

By Anne M. Peterson
The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Looking back on it now, the Trail Blazers were clearly smart to pick up Enes Kanter after he was waived by the New York Knicks.

Kanter was brought aboard for Portland as insurance for the final stretch of the season, meant to back up starter Jusuf Nurkic.

Then Nurkic broke his leg and Kanter was thrust into a starting role with his new team. After Portland’s playoff-opening victory over the Oklahoma City Thunder, Damian Lillard dubbed the 6-foot-11 center the Blazers’ MVP.

“He had a huge presence down the stretch and played a huge part in us winning this game,” Lillard said after Portland’s 104-99 victory Sunday.

Kanter finished with 20 points and a career playoff-high 18 rebounds, and was effective on defense against the likes of Russell Westbrook and Paul George.

It’s been quite a journey from New York castoff to Portland playoff hero for the seven-year

NBA veteran.

Kanter, 26, was waived by the Knicks following the trade deadline. Once a starter, he fell out of the rotation altogether when New York — which finished with the worst record in the league — turned its focus to younger players.

Kanter, who came to the Knicks in 2017 from Oklahoma City in the Carmelo Anthony trade, averaged 14 points and 10.8 rebounds in 115 games over two seasons.

The Blazers picked him up just before the All-Star break, envisioning him as the second team center. But on March 25, Nurkic crashed awkwardly to the court during a game at home against the Brooklyn Nets. Nurkic, who was averaging 14.6 points and 10.4 rebounds, broke his leg in two places and was out for the season.

Nurkic is a Portland favorite — fans donated to put up a billboard honoring the “Bosnian Beast” after his injury — but Kanter has since endeared himself, too. Kanter appeared in 23 games with the Blazers in the regular season and started in eight, averaging 13.1 points and 8.6 rebounds.

Dodgers, MLB honor Jackie Robinson's centennial year

By Beth Harris
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Vin Scully joined the widow of Jackie Robinson to honor the player who broke baseball's color barrier during Robinson's centennial birthday celebration Monday night.

Scully greeted 96-year-old Rachel Robinson with a kiss after being introduced to the crowd, with Scully drawing the loudest cheers in a rare public appearance.

He stood behind Rachel with his hands holding her arms during the national anthem at Dodger Stadium. They were joined by Robinson's daughter, Sharon, and son, David, who linked arms with their mother as they walked on the field.

Robinson became the first black player in Major League Baseball with the Brooklyn Dodgers on April 15, 1947. Scully began calling the team's games three years later, and the now-retired Hall of Fame announcer was friendly off the field with the man he called "Jack."

Only 7.7% of current MLB players are black, according to MLB.

"If not for Jackie Robinson, I probably wouldn't be here today playing baseball in the United States," said Cincinnati Reds outfielder Yasiel Puig, who came from Cuba to chase his pro aspirations. "That's the reason we respect this day."

Robinson, who died at age 53 in 1972, would have turned 100 on Jan. 31.

His No. 42 was worn by every major leaguer Monday. The number was retired around the league in 1997.

"For me, it's a big opportunity and responsibility that I hold very dear to my heart," Dodgers manager Dave Roberts said. "To put this uniform on today and wear that number today, 42, it's always special."

Colorado Rockies manager Bud Black recalled reading about Robinson as a youngster.

"To this day I still read about him," Black said in San Diego. "What a pioneer. What a great example of a human being and what he meant to our country, and in the bigger picture, what he meant for all of us culturally, not only in baseball, but in society."

In Minnesota, Toronto Blue Jays manager Charlie Montoyo started his pregame media session at 3:42 p.m. CDT in honor of Robinson.

"That's probably one of the people in baseball I wish I would've met," he said.

At Dodger Stadium, the pregame ceremonies included 42 current and former Jackie Robinson Foundation scholars. Students from Cleveland Elementary, Washington Middle School and John Muir High — all attended by Robinson while growing up in nearby Pasadena — were on hand.

Robinson's No. 42 was cut into the center field grass.

The Robinson siblings each tossed out first pitches. David's was a strike to Roberts, while Sharon's bounced on its way to catcher Russell Martin.

Sharon Robinson works as MLB's education programming consultant.

The Dodgers hosted an invitation-only 100th birthday celebration in the Stadium Club featuring a sneak preview of the Jackie Robinson Museum,

Rafa's back

King of clay Nadal unsure how Monte Carlo return will go

By Jerome Pugmire
The Associated Press

MONACO — Rafael Nadal is unsure how his latest injury return will go this week, even though it will be on the clay-court king's favorite surface.

The second-ranked Spaniard is coming back at the Monte Carlo Masters, a tournament he has won a record 11 times along with the French Open and Barcelona.

"It has been a tough year and a half for me, so it's tough to have a clear view about how I am," Nadal said Monday at the French Riviera tournament, where he plays Spanish countryman Roberto Bautista Agut in the second round on Wednesday.

"I had too many stops; I didn't find a way to play three weeks in a row without problems. So it has been hard for me. When you have these things going on, on the mental side it's up and down. It's always like a comeback."

Even Toni Nadal, his uncle and former coach, was skeptical about Nadal's long-term future in tennis in an interview with El Pais last month.

"Rafael wants to continue playing, despite his physical problems," Toni said. "That is what will continue to be decisive. Until when, who knows? Maybe two or three more years. What I'm saying is that Rafael is not a tennis player, he's an injured person who plays tennis."

Responding on Monday, the 32-year-old Nadal said his uncle had apologized for the comments.

"He came to the court and felt sorry for that. Toni wanted to say it in a positive way because of course I had many issues," Nadal said. "Toni has conferences for companies every week. So when you talk a lot, sometimes you make some mistakes."

Bautista Agut beat top-ranked Novak Djokovic at the Miami Open last month — where Nadal did not play. His troublesome right knee had flared up again the previous tournament, forcing him to pull out of his semifinal against Roger Federer at Indian Wells.

Nadal resumed practice two weeks ago and his knee is holding up.

"My knee is quite good. Happy for that. Now I need to work on the tennis," he said. "I hope the competition puts me in the rhythm I need."

Nadal usually finds his rhythm quicker than anyone on clay.

Last year, he missed February and March after retiring in the fifth set of his Australian Open quarterfinal against Marin Cilic with a hip injury.

However, it did not stop him reeling off 14 straight wins on clay without dropping a set — winning two Davis Cup matches, the Monte Carlo and Barcelona titles before Dominic Thiem stopped him in the Madrid Masters quarterfinals.

Nadal went on to win the Rome Masters and French Open and reached the Wimbledon semifinals on grass, losing an epic five-setter to Djokovic.

Cincinnati stays in its backyard for next coach

By Joe Kay
The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — John Brannen played pick-up games at Cincinnati's on-campus arena when he was growing up and vividly recalls watching Kenyon Martin dunk over another player. He's coached — and lost — with visiting teams at the same arena.

The local guy is now in charge of the home team.

The Bearcats decided to stay in their backyard for Mick Cronin's replacement, choosing Brannen — the head coach at nearby Northern Kentucky — to try to extend their American Athletic Conference success and get deeper into the NCAA Tournament.

The 45-year-old coach grew up in northern Kentucky and was at the top of Cincinnati's list when Cronin — another Cincinnati-area native — left for UCLA last week.

"Nobody trumped John," athletics director Mike Bohn said Monday.

Brannen led Northern Kentucky to unmatched success in its first three seasons in Division I, leading the Norse to a pair of NCAA Tournament appearances and winning the Horizon League's coach of the year award. When he arrived on the Norse campus, many students still rooted for the Kentucky Wildcats at tournament time.

That changed when the Norse reached the tournament in their first year of eligibility and gave Kentucky a scare in the first round before losing 79-70. They reached it again this season and lost to runner-up Texas Tech 72-57 in the opening round.

Getting the Bearcats deeper into the tournament will be one of Brannen's main goals.

Cincinnati reached the NCAA Tournament each of the last nine seasons under Cronin, who dug the program out from its mess after Bob Huggins' departure. But the Bearcats reached the Sweet 16 only once, in 2012. A first-round loss to Iowa last month in Columbus, Ohio made it seven straight years of failing to get beyond the opening weekend.

In the short term, Brannen takes over a team in transition at the guard spot. The Bearcats lose senior point guards Justin Jenifer and Cane Broome. Jarron Cumberland, the AAC's player of the year, hasn't declared whether he'll return for a senior season.

The most intriguing question is how much Brannen changes the Bearcats' style. Cronin emphasized defense, rebounding and toughness. While Brannen also likes full-court defensive pressure, his offense at Northern Kentucky was much more wide open.

CAULIFLOWER?

Good. These recipes? Better.

By Daniel Neman
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Cauliflower’s moment in the sun as a food fad came to an abrupt halt a few years ago when someone sliced it cross-wise and called it a cauliflower steak. Cauliflower is not a steak. There is nothing steaklike about cauliflower. And while we’re at it, you know those cauliflower-based pizza crusts that they say don’t taste like cauliflower? They taste like cauliflower.

The tofu of vegetables

That said, I love cauliflower, except in its steak and pizza applications. One friend of mine calls cauliflower the tofu of vegetables, because it soaks up and takes on the flavor of anything it is with. And that is true when it is served with a cheesy or spicy sauce. But when it is served by itself, unadorned, it has a mildly nutty flavor all its own. To sample the many various aspects of cauliflower, I made it a few different ways. One was in an amazing savory pie. The recipes took some time and effort to make, with terrific results. But the best way could not have been simpler; it is the method that, to me, allows the pure, warm flavor of cauliflower to come through. I roasted it. All I needed was a little olive oil, a sprinkling of salt, a dash of pepper and an oven. The result was basic, elemental cauliflower, cauliflower at its most essential. It was perfection, and you can’t improve on perfection.

Vegetarian done right

But I tried. And if anything can be more perfect than perfect, it is a savory Cauliflower Cheese Pie with grated potato crust. This dish is absolutely stellar. The recipe comes from the “Moosewood Cookbook,” which is sort of the bible for vegetarians. As in, “In the beginning, there was the ‘Moosewood Cookbook.’” Originally self-published in 1974, it has become one of the 10 best-selling cookbooks of alltime according to the New York Times. Additionally, in 2007, the James Beard Foundation named the book to the Cookbook Hall of Fame. I have made many dishes from this book over the years, but the Cauliflower Cheese Pie may be my new favorite. The crust is basically a potato pancake baked in a pie pan: grated potatoes, grated onions and an egg white. Once that is essentially parbaked, you add a layer of shredded cheddar cheese (I used sharp cheese, which I would recommend), then a layer of thyme-scented, sautéed cauliflower and onions, and then another layer of shredded cheese. Pour in a simple custard of eggs and a little milk, bake, and you end up with a dish that will make even the most fervent carnivore say, “maybe these Moosewood people are on to something.”

ROASTED CAULIFLOWER

Yield: 4 servings

1 pound cauliflower, about 1 medium-large head, trimmed and cut into ¼-inch-thick slices
1 ½ tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
Sea salt
Coarsely ground black pepper

1. Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Place cauliflower in a large mixing bowl. Pour on just enough olive oil to coat. Season generously with salt and pepper and toss gently until evenly coated.
2. Lay cauliflower pieces out on a baking sheet. Drizzle any remaining oil from the bowl on top. Bake, turning once, until caramelized on edges and tender, 25 to 30 minutes. Serve warm or at room temperature, as a side dish. You can also sprinkle it with a very good aged vinegar. Or, cut florets into smaller pieces and add to salads.

1 egg white, lightly beaten
1 tablespoon oil
For the filling
1 tablespoon olive oil or butter
1 cup chopped onion
2 medium garlic cloves, minced

1. Preheat oven to 400 degrees.
2. For the crust: Combine grated potato, onion, salt and egg white in a small bowl, and mix well. Transfer to a pie pan and pat into place with lightly floured fingers, building up the sides into a handsome edge.
3. Bake for 30 minutes, then brush crust with 1 tablespoon of oil (or less) and bake it 10 more minutes. Remove from oven and lower temperature to 375 degrees.
4. For the filling: Heat 1 tablespoon olive oil or butter in a large skillet. Add onion, garlic, salt, pepper, basil and thyme, and sauté over medium heat for about 5 minutes. Add cauliflower, stir and cover. Cook until tender, stirring occasionally, about 8 to 10 minutes.

Ground chicken wrap reinvents lunchtime

By Chris Ross
The San Diego Union-Tribune

Canadian food blogger Allison Day believes that “life is too short to eat a bad lunch.” The goal of her new cookbook, “Modern Lunch,” is to offer creative ideas for delicious lunches that are budget-conscious and easy to prepare. This flavorful recipe even includes “edible dinnerware” in the form of a vegetable wrap. It calls for ground chicken, but you can substitute crumbled tofu if you want to make it vegetarian. It takes 20 minutes to prepare and will keep in the fridge for up to five days. See more of Day’s recipes on her blog, YummyBeet.com.

CHICKEN, EGGPLANT AND BASIL WRAPS WITH CASHEWS

Serves 4

1 tablespoon coconut oil
1 pound ground chicken or 2 boneless, skinless chicken breasts pulsed in a food processor until minced
2 Chinese eggplants, sliced into thin rounds
Heaping ½ cup unsalted raw or roasted cashews
3 tablespoons rice vinegar
3 tablespoons gluten-free tamari or soy sauce
2 green onions (white and green parts), minced
2 cups coarsely torn basil leaves (use Thai basil if available)

1 head lettuce such as iceberg or Bibb, or cabbage, leaves separated
For the filling, in a large, high-sided or nonstick skillet, heat the oil over medium heat. Add the chicken, eggplant and cashews, and sauté until the chicken is cooked through and the eggplant is tender and browned, about 10 to 12 minutes. Stir in the vinegar and tamari or soy sauce and cook for 1 minute longer, until the liquid is absorbed. Remove the skillet from the heat and stir in the green onion and basil. Transfer the filling to a large container or bowl, cool, seal or cover, and refrigerate until you are ready to assemble the wraps.

To assemble, divide the filling between 4 bento boxes or containers. Roll the lettuce leaves and tuck them in bento boxes or containers or securely wrap and pack on the side. Seal everything up and refrigerate until you are ready to take it with you. When you arrive at work, keep your meal cold in the refrigerator or with a cooler pack in your lunch bag. To serve, keep the filling cold or reheat, if desired, then top the lettuce leaves with filling, tuck in the sides (like a taco), and enjoy.

MAKE IT VEGETARIAN

Replace the chicken with 1 package (12 ounces) extra-firm tofu, finely crumbled after pressing out the liquid. As it’s already cooked, the tofu will only take about 5 minutes in the pan to dry out and become a touch crispy.
